A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed the joint resolution from the Senate to authorize the continuance of the work upon the two wings of the Capitol, with an amendment, and requesting the concurrence of the Senate therein.

The PRESIDENT subsequently said: There is on the table a joint resolution which has been returned from the House of Representatives, with an amendment, to authorize the continuance of the work on the two wings of the Capitol. What disposition will the Senate make of it?

Mr. SHIELDS. The proper committee to which that resolution ought to be referred are not now here, nor are they ready to act upon it; and as I suppose there will be no serious objection to it, I move that it be taken up and put upon its passage, without being referred to any committee.

The PRESIDENT. This is a joint resolution which has been returned from the House of Representatives. It will be in the power of the Senate to act upon it immediately, or to refer it, as they may think proper.

Mr. SHIELDS. It seems to me that it may as well be disposed of now.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment made by the House is, to strike out all after the resolving clause, and insert the following:

"That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the period from which the passage of this resolution to the end of the fiscal year terminating June 30th, 1853, the sum of $500,000, for the continuance of the work on the two wings of the Capitol."

Mr. GWIN. There is not a majority of the Committee on Finance in the Senate; and as it is a matter that action should be had upon as early as possible, I will move its reference to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was going to say that the Committee for the District of Columbia is in precisely the same condition. There is not a quorum of the committee in the city, and that is the reason why I think it would be better to pass the measure at once.

Mr. STOCKTON. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment. This is a bill of great importance, and should be passed forthwith.

Mr. MASON. I was only going to suggest that the resolution appropriates half a million of money. It is a resolution originating, I believe, with the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Committee on Public Buildings.

Mr. MASON. This resolution appropriates a very large sum of money, and though I dislike to throw any obstacles in the way of its passage unnecessarily, it seems to me that it should go to its appropriate committee. I understand the Senator, who desires its passage now, to intimate that there is not a majority of the Committee on Finance present at this time. I think there may be a majority of the Committee on Public Buildings, which is an appropriate committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is not a majority of the Committee on Public Buildings present, nor of the Committee for the District of Columbia; and, consequently, if the matter is referred to a committee, it will remain a long time in abeyance. It is true it appropriates $500,000, but that is only half the amount which the President has called for in the civil bill. It extends to the end of the fiscal year, 1853.

Mr. MASON. What is the amount in the original resolution?

The PRESIDENT. The original resolution is, that the Secretary of the Interior may continue in employment, for the construction of the wings of the Capitol, so many mechanics and laborers as can be properly engaged in the work, and appropriates $10,000 to carry that into effect. As the resolution has now come back, it is proposed to strike out the sum of $10,000 and insert $500,000.

Mr. SHIELDS. The original resolution was merely temporary. My opinion is, that if we continue the work at all, if it be not abandoned entirely, now is the best time for these men to go on with the work. There cannot be a better season than the present; and surely, if it is not entirely to be given up, we ought to pass this resolution. The work has been neglected long enough. That is my view of the matter, and I have no other object in passing it now. As it is to be acted upon, I presume, sooner or later, and as this is only half the amount which the Executive calls for, I take it for granted we may as well adopt the resolution now. I understand the question has been long and earnestly debated in the House of Representatives, and after having been thus maturely deliberated upon, it has been passed in the shape in which it now comes before the Senate.

Mr. BORLAND. I am aware, Mr. President, that in rising to say anything on the side of this question which I feel bound to occupy, I place myself in a very ungracious attitude before the Senate—certainly before the galleries, which, to a great extent, are made parties, deeply interested parties, to this bill and its discussion.

And, sir, if I were to consult my feelings and my comfort—

A SENATOR. And the galleries.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes, sir, and the galleries, I would now be silent.

Sir, for two weeks past I have been beset daily on my way to and from the Capitol, not by persons advocating the great interests of the country, or the passage of this bill on account of any great public necessity, but by those who—from considerations of personal interest, and in whose feelings and wants I most deeply sympathize—urge its passage as furnishing them employment. That is, in effect, calling upon Congress to convert this Government, in the administration of the public funds, into a great national almshouse, and by direct appropriations from the Treasury, to take care of the poor—to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked. Now, Mr. President, on the score of charity—while I have no professions to make—it is due to myself, on this occasion, to say that I believe my heart is as warm, and my sympathies as deep and as strong for the poor and the suffering, as those of any advocate of this bill; and I trust I am prepared to go as far as any other man, in extending all the aid in my power to those who need assistance. Even, sir, in my legislative capacity, I think I have manifested a disposition, upon this floor, to go as far as the most liberal sense of public duty will permit for all objects of real merit. Sir, as you know, I have been charged here with a liberality amounting to extravagance.

It has been said, that the course I have advocated in regard to certain measures would bankrupt the Government, if carried out. Sir, what were those measures to which I refer, and which it was said, if carried out, would bankrupt the Government? They were bills for the relief of the widows and orphans of the gallant men who have fallen in fighting the battles of our country; bills to give them the poor pittance of some eight dollars a month, to supply to them some pretence—and a mere pretence it was—as a substitute for those means of living which the service of the country had taken from them, in taking away, to return no more, their husbands and their fathers. For advocating such measures as these I have been charged with extravagance, with advocating a policy which would bankrupt the Government. Sir, to the extent to which I have gone before in support of measures such as these I will go again, and even further, if necessary; because in them, and the whole length their policy would carry us, I see no sound principle violated and no cause to fear injury to any legitimate interest. The idea of Government bankrupt from such a policy is, in my opinion, preposterous. It is not in giving to these widows and orphans the paltry sums of eight dollars a month that we will do this mischief. It is not by means like these, small in their actual amount and limited by the class to which they belong, that we are to bring about the evils of heavy taxation and extravagant appropriations of the public money. Sir, I think the Constitution and our duty, as men and as legislators, upon considerations of sound policy, not only permit but require us to make such appropriations as I have mentioned, and to make them liberally. I will not go into the reasons now which lead me to that conclusion.

But, Mr. President, I come now to ask, what consideration of public policy, what important or pressing public interest, what public necessity requires this appropriation of half a million of dollars? And especially do I desire to understand the reasons which induce its advocates to ask its passage upon such short notice; to press it upon us in such hot haste; to seek to avoid even the usual, the regular, and, in my opinion, the very necessary and proper reference of it to the appropriate committee? Sir, the consideration of this subject is sprung upon us this morning unexpectedly, and, as I think, in a most extraordinary manner. For myself, although I have been thinking of it since I heard of its passage in the House on Saturday last, it has been only in a general way, and I am not prepared, on the spur of the moment, with the facts which belong to and the considerations which grow out of it, in a way to do justice to the subject or my own views. But compelled, as I am, to speak—if I speak at all, with my thoughts thus crude and unarranged, I shall still speak plainly what I do think, and as briefly as I can.

Mr. President, I will not now go into the question as to whether this extension of the public buildings be necessary and proper or not. But I think it could be clearly shown by any one who would take the trouble to investigate it, that it is neither proper nor necessary. It has been said, I know, that the Chambers of the two Houses of Congress are not large enough. Now, I appeal to every one who hears me if there is any foundation, in fact, for such a position? Whoever will look around him will find, I think, the Chamber is not only large enough now, but likely to be so for years to come. And even if they are not, or shall not be, there is room enough within the outside walls of this Capitol which, with a comparatively small appropriation of money, could be so disposed of as to enlarge the rooms and improve their construction to an extent which would be ample, commodious, and comfortable for both Houses, with all their increase and all our officers, for the next fifty years. That this is so, and susceptible of demonstration, I cannot question, unless I reject the evidence of my senses.

But, sir, suppose, for the argument, that this extension of the Capitol is now required, how is it to be done; how has it been done; how has the plan adopted been so far executed; how has the money heretofore appropriated been used? I do not undertake to say that this money has been improperly expended. But can any one upon this floor tell me how it has been used? Do we know that it has been faithfully, properly, and economically expended for the purpose to which it was appropriated? Sir, I am not an architect; I am not a stone-mason, nor a builder; but I think I have seen enough of the manner in which building is usually carried on to authorize me in saying, from what I have also seen of this, that no private man in this country, not a member of this body, who, with the means of building for himself, would ever permit work to be done for him, and at his cost, as this has been done. I say not this now of the quality of the work, but of the mode in which it has been done. I have, in passing through the grounds, sir, been unable to avoid seeing the manner in which this work has been carried on; and I do not hesitate to express the opinion that it must have been at an expense from five to ten times as great as any prudent private individual would have incurred in the same quantity and kind of work on his own account.

And now, a word as to the quality of the work. As I said, I am not an architect, nor a stone mason, and, therefore, have not made a thorough examination of this point; so I do not undertake to say positively that this work has not been done faithfully, and in a workmanlike manner. But there is some reason for believing that it has not been. This we do know—a committee of the House of Representatives has been appointed to examine and report whether it be so or not. I have been told, on several occasions, that that committee was satisfied that the work was well done; had ceased their examinations, and abandoned their opposition to the progress of the work. I am authorized to say that this is not the case. It so happens that I am on terms of personal intimacy with the chairman of that committee, and I learn from him that so far from being satisfied with the work, the very reverse is true; and he is convinced that the apprehensions which led to the investigation are founded in fact; that from actual examination he does not hesitate to pronounce the work unfaithfully and badly done; that the foundations are not built of materials, or put together in such manner as to be safe and secure for the edifice to be raised upon them.

Mr. MANGUM. Who is the chairman of that committee?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. McNair, of Pennsylvania. In the candor and fairness of that gentleman I have entire confidence; and for his judgment I have great respect. He may be wrong; but I understand that a majority of the committee agree with him fully. I learn from him that they were utterly amazed when they came to examine the work, and found of what miserable stuff it consisted. And permit me to say that I have some knowledge upon this point from my own personal observation. When my attention was called to it, as I was passing a portion of the wall, I, with the toe of my boot, pushed out from between the stones portions of the mortar, after the work had been standing for months. I confess that this astonished me. But, sir, the next morning I saw what was not less significant. I found some of the workmen, trowel in hand, scraping out that portion of the mortar I had tested with my boot toe, and replacing it with new mortar. How it may be in the interior of the wall I do not pretend to know. That is what I found on the surface. But I learn from the committee that they found several portions of the wall filled in with loose sand, and mortar with little or no tenacity; and that there are no girders or binders as they are called; so that the work, thus imperfectly done, is liable to be crushed down by the immense weight which, if it progresses, must be placed upon it. Now these are statements of gentlemen in whose integrity I have perfect confidence, and for whose judgment I have very great respect.

Again, sir, I have learned that the stone of which these foundations have been built, has not been subjected to that preparatory test which is customary among builders to determine its capability to sustain the almost countless tons of weight to be piled upon it. And I have never heard the statement contradicted, although it has been made long ago. Moreover, it is also said that this stone has been procured from a condemned and rejected quarry—that its use was undertaken for the foundation of the Washington Monument, but being found not to stand the test of strength, it was rejected. These are important points. I may be misinformed upon them. If so, I desire correct information, and will be obliged to any gentleman who will give it to me.

Such, then, I am left to believe, is the result now before us; such the material, and such the manner in which it has been worked up into what is called the foundations of the extension of the Capitol, for which we have already paid $100,000. Is the work worth the money? I do not think it is. From the best information I have been able to obtain, and to which I have alluded, it is not only not worth what we have already paid for it, but, if received and adopted as the foundation upon which the superstructure is to be raised, it will be a dead loss in itself, and will occasion the loss of the millions besides which we shall be called upon to expend in raising that superstructure; for, by the time, or before, the topmost stone shall have been set in its place, the whole structure, unsubstantial and insecure in its foundations—a house built upon the sand, crushed down with its own weight, like those frail edifices built for speculation in some of the northern towns, of which we frequently read accounts—will tumble to the ground, forming at once a monument of ruins to the genius of corruption, and a mausoleum to its dupes.

Sir, will or can any one tell me of the manner in which the $100,000 we have heretofore appropriated has been dispensed by and to its recipients? I have been told—if incorrectly, I hope some one will set me right—that the whole of this amount has been paid out of the Treasury, in sums varying from $5,000 to $20,000, upon the simple order, without the usual vouchers, of the architect—a new officer of our Government, not known, that I am aware, to the Constitution or the laws—a sort of presidential creation—and sustaining to Congress no relations of personal or official responsibility whatever. And these sums—embracing, in the aggregate, the whole amount of the appropriation, drawn upon this simple order of the architect, without vouchers, except such as he may choose to furnish after the expenditure—are dispensed at his will and discretion!

And now, sir, it is proposed by this resolution, hastily, without notice, without investigation, without even permitting a committee to examine it, to put five times as much as at first—half a million of dollars—in the same hands, for a similar purpose; indeed, a continuation of the very same work, and to be dispensed in the very same way.

Mr. BADGER. Will my friend from Arkansas allow me?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BADGER. My friend from Arkansas is, no doubt, correct in saying that the money is called for upon the draft or order of the architect, and the reason is, that the act of Congress directed the money to be employed in erecting these wings to be disbursed by the superintendent of the work. The money is drawn out of the Treasury in the same way that all other money is drawn out, and is accounted for in precisely the same way.

Mr. BORLAND. Well, sir, I am very glad to hear that accuracy and propriety have been observed in the expenditure of this money. If my friend from North Carolina states this as a fact, within his own knowledge, I will take it as settling that part of the question.

Mr. BADGER. I do not know it; but I have understood it to be so.

Mr. BORLAND. And I have understood it to be quite the contrary. I repeat, if my friend from North Carolina would state this as a fact within his own knowledge, I would rely upon it. But being stated as a mere matter of opinion, based upon what he has heard, he must excuse me if I cannot take his opinion instead of my own, when mine is based upon what I consider reliable information.

Mr. BADGER. I think the difficulty of my friend is, that he does not understand the ordinary mode in which money is drawn in pursuance of an order of this kind. Congress appropriates money to be applied for a particular purpose, under the direction of the person appointed with that view. He is the agent to whom Congress has intrusted this business. He draws the money at once. He does not take vouchers before expending the money; he draws from time to time, and settles with his vouchers. That is the usual course. All I know about it is, that the act of Congress authorizes the expenditure of this money, which was appropriated last Congress, by the architect whom the President shall select for carrying on the work. We made him our officer or agent to disburse this appropriation.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope it is all true. I am not well informed on this matter, as my friend very rightly supposes. I am, to a considerable extent, ignorant of the details of the expenditure of the public money; and I am thankful, always, when a friend will inform me. But, sir, it is for that very reason, if there was no other, that I am particular on this occasion, and desire that this matter shall be put in such a form, and made so clear and intelligible, that even one so dull as myself may understand it, and that the people may know how their money is expended. That I do not and cannot understand these things, is what I complain of—it is an important part of my objection to this resolution. If our legislation be, as it seems to have been in this case, obscure in its terms, loose in its provisions, and fails to impose sufficient safeguards and restrictions around our moneyed expenditures to make them safe, and faithful, and economical, I think it is high time that we should change its character, and bring those expenditures alike within safe bounds, and within our own knowledge; for until we do so, to say the least of it, we not only are not, but cannot be as careful in the discharge of these duties we are sent here to perform, as we should be.

Now, sir, with all these things staring me in the face, whatever may be my feelings of sympathy for the laboring men who have been brought here to work upon the Capitol, and who now throng the galleries for effect—whatever may be my desire to see them provided with work, and supplied with the means of a comfortable subsistence, I cannot give my vote for this large, and, as I regard it, unnecessary and improper appropriation.

But, Mr. President, these, in themselves, are small things we have been considering—the mere incidents and indications of larger, vastly larger, and more important considerations which lie entirely above and beyond this resolution, and the particular object to which, upon its face, it is directed. The resolution, with its immediate object, is part of a system—a small part, I admit, but yet no less a part, and, though small in itself, a very significant part of a system of measures, which, in my humble opinion, involve the fundamental principles of our Government, and upon the practical interpretation and observance of which, depends the weal or woe of this Union, in all time to come. Although, therefore, I entertain, and have sought to show serious and insuperable objections to the resolution itself, I have availed of it, mainly, for the occasion it afforded of expressing my views of the great system of which it is the humble, but significant, and, perhaps, because small and insidious, the more dangerous type and representative.

Sir, there is no concealing or avoiding the fact that the dangerous tendency of our system of government, is that towards centralism and consolidation. I well know, sir, that in asserting this, I but suggest an argument which is ever potential with certain Senators upon this floor, and with a certain school of politicians throughout the country, to carry them in the very opposite direction from that in which I would be glad to see them go, and, as I think, the good of this country requires them to go. I know full well that those Senators and that school of politicians to which I allude, and of which they are the honored leaders, need no other and no stronger argument to induce them to support any measure than the proof that it ministers to that tendency I have mentioned—to concentrate and consolidate power here in this Federal head, at the expense of the sovereignty, the independence, the rights, and legitimate power of the several States. It is not, therefore, in the vain hope of inducing them to abandon the resolution, that I have characterized it as representative of that Federal system; by no means, sir; for I well know that they will vote for it to a man. That is a foregone conclusion. But, sir, I so characterized it and commented upon it, for the purpose—the legitimate purpose, I trust—of marking the position of the political party, the Democratic party, to which I belong, in opposition to centralism and consolidation, and the obligation we recognize to oppose all measures which are tainted of that tendency—to avoid them as unclean, unholy, and dangerous things—to meet them at the threshold, and resist them by all lawful means, at all hazards, and to the last extremity.

In my opinion, there is no danger of a dissolution of this Union, or destruction of the Government, by a flying off of any of its parts. The tendency is centripetal, and therein lies the danger. The sources of this danger consist in the tendency of power, wherever it may be found, whether in the hands of individuals or governments, to cumulate itself and strengthen its own functions. Beginning with the Government, this tendency has been manifested, and, with occasional checks, has slowly, but in my opinion, surely been increasing down to the present hour. An instance of it is seen whenever and wherever a power is exercised which the Constitution has not granted. If, I repeat, this Union of States shall ever be destroyed, this will be the cause. Overriding the Constitution, disregarding rights and crushing interests, it will ultimately grasp and absorb all the functions of all the governments, State and Federal. Towering up as a great central power, it will overshadow the States, and swallow up their sovereignty; and then nothing of Union will be left but its name, while one great consolidated despotism will fill its place. Who will love, and venerate, and adhere to it then? In this way, if ever, this Union may be, not dissolved, but consolidated and destroyed. It may "grow to a pleurisy, and die of its own too much."

Upon one occasion—and it is my wont upon all suitable occasions—I was advocating an extension of our possessions—aye, sir, an acquisition of more territory, believing it to be the best, the most practicable, and the most certain means of giving legitimate strength, and tending to insure perpetuity to our system of government, by encouraging the increase in the number of States, which, by their separate and diversified interests, will form the best, perhaps the only effective counterpoise to the controlling tendency of the federal power. While doing this, I was interrupted by a gentleman of the opposite school of politics, with this remark: "Sir, if we extend our limits as far as you propose, the central fire will not be able to warm the circumference of our system of government." And that, I replied, is just what I wish to accomplish. I want no "central fire" which shall have power to extend its heat to the circumference of our system. I want each State to furnish its own fire; and that of each uniting with the other, and throwing here upon the center a focus of rays of light and heat, give that degree of genial warmth and vitality, and no more, which may enable this center to perform its legitimate functions, which, I think, are few and well defined, with a healthy but not excessive vigor and efficiency. For, I added, should this natural and lawful order ever be reversed, and the central fire become so intense as to send its stimulating rays to the circumference, it would be but a little while before a general conflagration would ensue, from being consumed in which no earthly power could save our rights, our liberties, and our happiness.

These opposite opinions, as to the tendency of our system of government, which I have attempted to delineate, do, in my opinion, characterize the two great political parties of the country, and draw the line of separation between them. Fuse these opposite opinions into one, or obliterate the line I have drawn, and political parties, as distinguished by principles, cease to exist. I have always stood upon the Democratic side of this line, and my course has ever been away from the center. I trust never to see those opinions fused into each other, and loose their distinctive and antagonistic characters. I trust never to see that line of demarcation between the Democratic and Whig parties obliterated. Keep those opposite opinions clearly and accurately enunciated; keep that line well defined and deeply drawn, and the parties they divide boldly arrayed against each other, and my faith in truth is such that I shall have no fears for her success in the conflict she is fated to wage with error.

And the next great fact, connected with the first I have dwelt upon, and which can no more be concealed, avoided, or disregarded, than the first, is, that the most facile and fearful instrumentality of the fearful centralism I have mentioned is federal patronage, in the protean shapes of large moneyed expenditures. And, in view of this, what is more palpable to our daily observation, what more painfully impressed upon every patriot's convictions, at every turn of the federal kaleidoscope, here at this well-spring of—I will not, for decency's sake, say corruption, but—intrigue, and arrangement, than that this malign, I had almost said, this obscene, instrumentality, this very Juggernaut of political morality, is rapidly augmenting its power? Who does not see, who is not made to feel, in some way or other, that this is so? He who cannot see it, has, in my opinion, already fallen under the curse of "judicial blindness." He who will not see it—I will not say what has befallen him.

Turn back a few pages of the political history of this Government—only as far back as 1839. Then, with an expensive war on hand, the country thought the Government not only extravagant, but profligate; and not only censured, but repudiated and hurled from power the Administration, because the annual expenditure was $39,000,000, one third of which, or about $13,000,000, was consumed in that war! Since then, sir, only thirteen years, the expenditures have run up to the enormous sum of $52,000,000! and that, too, in a year of profound peace with "all the world and the rest of mankind." And yet, who talks now of extravagance? Who arrays himself against this great and growing evil? Who raises his voice against its present enormity? Who puts forth his hand to stay its further and fearful progress? Mr. President, I have listened long and earnestly for the sound of that voice. I have watched anxiously and with interest, to see that hand raised. I wished it to be, I hoped it would be, a voice of sufficient depth and compass to be heard, like a trumpet in battle, from one extremity of our lines to the other, rousing the sluggard, nerving the timid, pushing on the brave to deeds of noble daring. I desired it to be, and I trusted it would be, a hand of sufficient strength, at once to strike down the ranks of the enemy, but, within our own lines, to "drag up drowned honor by the locks." But, sir, I have listened, I have watched in vain. I had hoped that "some older and better soldier" than myself would have waged this battle for the right. I have hoped in vain. Alas, sir, my voice is not loud, and my hand is not strong. And while I well know that I am not by age, service, or position, entitled to take a prominent position, and especially not authorized to speak for the great party of which I am an humble member, and may, even for what I have said, be deemed by some presumptuous; nevertheless, a sense of duty to myself at least, and my own position, has impelled me to seize this occasion to give "a reason for the faith that is in me."

I am aware, sir, that many, perhaps all, who are here, belonging to the same party as myself, have been silent, because they consider the subject I have examined too small to furnish an occasion for them. Sir, the other day, when, by a simple resolution, this body appropriated $5,000 out of the contingent fund, for an object which at best was questionable, and I raised my voice against it, as in my opinion, disregarding the Constitution and the usual forms of law, I was told it was too small a matter to raise objections on. Sir, on that occasion, as upon this, I contended for a principle which is of the same character and force and obligation, whether it be involved in the appropriation of $5,000 or $5,000,000, or every dollar in the Treasury.

And now, Mr. President, in view of all I have said, I have some questions to ask, and I trust I shall not be deemed too presumptuous in asking them. I do not put them to our Whig friends. I know they are immovable, by anything I can say, on such a subject. But I put them to the Democrats.

That the evil tendency I have described is in operation and actively at work, there is no doubt, and just as little that its means are accumulating, and its power augmenting every day.

What, then, I ask, is the position, the duty, and the responsibility of the Democratic party before the country? The people of the country have already asked these questions, and in their own minds, doubtless, have determined what the answers should be. In my opinion, it is high time that we, too, were addressing ourselves to the business of answering them—not in words merely, but in action. We have pledged ourselves to them, upon certain doctrines, and they have sent us here as the exponents of their principles, and the guardians of their resulting rights and interests. It is by a course of action, therefore, in practical legislation that we are to redeem our pledge and justify their confidence. I repeat the question—what is the position of the Democratic party before the country?—what are its duties and responsibilities?

A short time since, there was before the country, and occupying the minds of the people, a most exciting subject; and out of that grew an issue—in my opinion, an illegitimate issue. The storms of agitation which were raised upon that, have now, in a great measure, subsided; leaving the time-honored, and trial-tested principles and doctrines of Democracy alike unimpaired in their integrity and strength, and strikingly triumphant in the general policy of the country, as claimed by our own party, as conceded (per force, doubtless) by the Whigs, and admitted by all, in theory. I think the present time, therefore, is peculiarly propitious for an effort, a united, and earnest, and vigorous effort on our part, to make the administration of the Government, in all its branches, conform in practice to what we hold to be the theory of its principles. Not only is the time propitious for such an effort, but, in my opinion, is filled to repletion with those circumstances and considerations which not only require it at our hands as a duty, but will make its success both certain and brilliant. This effort must consist in a grand rally in opposition to the general evil tendency of the Government, I have delineated—centralism; and directed particularly against that prominent element of it, now so actively in operation—the extravagant expenditure of the public money. Upon the issue thus to be raised, I doubt not we can unite not only all Democrats, but, leaving politicians out of view, the masses of honest men of every party. And what will, what must, be the result? I unhesitatingly answer—an overwhelming majority, of course, in our favor! Who can doubt it? While the spoilsmen, of whatever sect or profession, although somewhat formidable in numbers, activity, and concentration of forces, will stand revealed, exposed, and powerless for harm.

Mr. President, not only are our principles in the ascendant throughout the country, but we have a decided and acknowledged majority in both Houses of Congress. And yet, sir, what do our opponents tell us? What does the official organ of this Whig Administration flout in our very faces? Sir, they tell us that we are not true to our professions; that, with all our numerical strength in the halls of Congress, we tremble in our shoes, and dare not array ourselves against the policy of the Whig Executive at the other end of the avenue. We are taunted with what is claimed to be a fact—that we are dependent upon a Whig President and Cabinet for our policy—a policy, too, that, in a time of profound peace, has run the moneyed expenditures of this Government up to $52,000,000 a year! If we submit longer to this, how are we placed before the country? Will it not be an abandonment of the high ground we have heretofore occupied as a party? Will it not be tantamount to a confession that we have not been governed by principle ourselves, and have been unfair in charging want of principle upon our opponents?

In view of all this, I will ask any Democrat, when he goes before the country in the contest for which all of us are so busily girding ourselves, now what issue will he arraign his Whig opponent upon? Upon what ground will he say we must put the Whigs out of power—that the interest of the country requires that they should no longer hold the helm? What will he say when the Whig rises up and demands, “upon what issue?” Oh, sir, this will be a posing question to him who has to answer it for his party, unless we, by our action here, give him a better answer than I fear he can derive from our present attitude. Sir, if we would fight the battle ourselves, or enable our friends to do it for us, we must no longer sit quietly and humbly here, and slavishly legislate in obedience to estimate-decrees of the Whig Federal head at the other end of the avenue.

Mr. President, the theater upon which it is my fortune to play my part at home, compared with that of other Senators, is limited in extent. My State is sparsely populated. We have but four electoral votes. Yet so strong is the sense of political responsibility that I feel, that I am as anxious to place myself, as the representative of my party at home, right upon the record, and stand before my constituents upon the true Democratic platform in practice as well as theory, as if we gave four hundred votes instead of four.

Sir, I repeat, that if we expect Democratic candidates for elector or any other position in the party to go fairly before the people and fight our battles successfully, we must, not in profession, but by our action here, give them ground to stand on, and something to say. If we do not, we will be beaten; and worse than that, we will deserve to be beaten.

All the great political battles of the country, from the foundation of our Government, have been fought upon the same general issue that I now suggest. Talk about specific or other issues as you may, they all resolve themselves into this in the end. It is the fundamental issue of them all. Why, for instance, did you oppose a protective tariff? Was it not because, first, it operated unequally upon different sections of the country and different industrial pursuits, but mainly because it was supposed to raise too much revenue, which, engendering extravagant expenditures, would corrupt the Government and all its dependencies by means of large patronage which does not bless, but actually curses, those who give as well as those who receive? I have never found a Democrat to dispute this with me. Have I not a right, then, as a Democrat, to ask of you, as Democrats, to stand up in practice to our professions? The people will hold us to this responsibility. There is only one way in which we can meet it properly and successfully. I think I have indicated that with sufficient clearness.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would ask the honorable Senator to give way for a moment.

Mr. BORLAND. I will have done in a moment. Mr. President, when we find one of these large appropriations, placing money unconditionally at the disposal of a political opponent of a majority of the two Houses of Congress, we find also a disposition to vote upon them without investigation. I do not say, that Senators who are advocating this course, have not investigated this particular matter; but they ought to remember that if they have done so, there may be others who have not. One of these—

Mr. CLARKE. If the honorable Senator will allow me one moment. I desire to move to postpone the consideration of this subject until to-morrow. It is one of very great importance. The honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] it is well known, was entitled to the floor to-day upon another subject. The time is passing away, and it will be almost impossible for him to occupy it. The bill, upon which he proposes to speak, is a great and important one, and of very essential consequence to many gentlemen in the Senate. I, therefore, with the Senator's leave, will move to postpone the further consideration of this subject. I desire to be heard upon it as does the honorable Senator from North Carolina. If the debate goes on, the day will be consumed by it; and I therefore appeal to the Senate that it is due, in courtesy to the Senator from Michigan, that the postponement should take place, in order to give him an opportunity to speak to-day. We all must know that this subject has been unexpectedly sprung upon us at this time; I move, therefore, that its further consideration be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. BORLAND. I will agree to what the Senator says; but permit me to say why. It is known to the Senate that I did not willingly engage in this discussion. I did not wish the resolution to be taken up for consideration to-day; but it was taken up and its immediate passage called for. I was opposed to it; and I felt that if I did not make my opposition then, there would be no opportunity for me to do so. I was unwilling that the vote should be taken, before I expressed my views upon the subject. No one is more anxious to hear the Senator from Michigan than I am; no one will listen to him with more pleasure; no one feels a greater desire for the passage of the bill he proposes to advocate. I will have accomplished the object which I have in view by agreeing with the Senator from Rhode Island in having this postponed. It is what I desired at first; I, therefore, am accommodated now.

Mr. MANGUM. I am not disposed to interpose any obstacle to hearing the Senator from Michigan. Will the Chair be so obliging as to inform me what was the motion pending before the last one was made?

The PRESIDENT. There was no motion. The question under consideration was as to concurring with the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution. The motion is now made to postpone the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow.

Mr. MANGUM. The question upon which the Senator from Michigan desires to speak is the Iowa land bill?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; and it is the special order.

Mr. MANGUM. I had very much hoped that that bill would have been brought to a conclusion to-morrow. I am rather unwilling to occupy the time of the Senate on the subject now before us, but so many remarks have been made, by the Senator from Arkansas, not immediately relevant—immediately, I say—to the question, that I feel inclined to offer a very few remarks myself.

Mr. CASS. I will observe that, as to my going on to-day, it is a matter of perfect indifference to me. What little I have to say, I can say in a very short time. I am prepared to do as the Senate pleases.

Mr. MANGUM. I hope we will have a vote to-morrow on the Iowa bill. I will sit until twelve o'clock at night to get a vote, and it is the only way you can get it.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina understand that the motion is to postpone the joint resolution now before the Senate, until to-morrow?

Mr. MANGUM. Yes, sir; I understand that is the question.

Mr. ATCHISON. I understood the Senator from Arkansas to give way for the purpose of permitting the motion to be made to postpone. If the debate goes on, he is entitled to the floor still.

Mr. MANGUM. The Senator from Arkansas yielded the floor.

Mr. BORLAND. I yielded it only to have that motion made.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope the joint resolution will be postponed until to-morrow. When I made the motion to take it up, I had no idea that it would occupy fifteen minutes. I certainly should not have made that motion, if I had thought it would occupy the time it is likely to occupy. I wish it now by all means to give way to the Senator from Michigan, and I ask my friend from North Carolina to give way for that purpose.

Mr. MANGUM. I will interpose no obstacle to hearing the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BORLAND. It is true, as was stated, that I gave way to a motion to postpone, and not for any other purpose. I did it as an act of courtesy. The question is not postponed; and I understand that if one who is speaking yields the floor for a particular motion, and that motion is not agreed to, he goes on with the subject-matter of his remarks, and continues the debate.

The PRESIDENT. Strictly speaking, that is not the case.

Mr. MANGUM. I will repeat what I have already stated, that I will interpose no obstacle to hearing the Senator from Michigan, and I will resume my seat after making a single remark or two, and touching a single point having no immediate relevancy to the bill under consideration. I have been greatly gratified to see a young Goliath step forth to endeavor to correct the practice of this Government. He is a member of the party which has entire control over the legislation of this body, and of the other House. I hope, sir, that the lecture which he has given his associates will produce a good effect. I have believed, and I am sure you have believed, for a long time that the Government was far departing from its ancient principles and practices. But the Senator's remarks were unfortunately misapplied to the Whig head at the other end of the avenue. Has the allegation or imputation been made that a cent has yet been expended which was not authorized and directed by an appropriation? I have heard no such allegation—none such can be made. I hope that the Senator and his associates on his side of the Chamber will endeavor to see the Government restricted to economy, and retracted in its expenses to his favorite Jeffersonian standard. I desire to see it. Why, sir, within my time—and I am yet a young man, as well as you, Mr. President, [laughter]—one Administration was put out of power for the immense and monstrous expenditure of $13,000,000 a year. Under its successors the expenditures amounted to $39,000,000 or $40,000,000, and they have now run up to $50,000,000. Whose fault is it? If we had a General Jackson here, who could control his troops, he would, in some degree, be responsible; but the case is different when we have a President whose political friends are in a minority in both branches of the Legislature. I hope my friend from Arkansas will bring to his assistance a sufficient number of the Democratic party to retract the Government to its ancient and economical practices. I have seen, or suspect I have seen, in the course of my service here, a little difference between profession and practice. Economy is a beautiful thing to be professed; it is a toy that tickles the ear of the farmer and the thrifty citizen in the country, who has a few pennies in his pocket, which he desires to keep from the grasp of rapacious office and job-seekers; they are not to be taken and paid for the bread of those who will not earn it. But let us see a little of the practice. I hope the honorable Senator will bring up his troops. He is a young commander, but has had experience—

Mr. ATCHISON. I call the honorable Senator from North Carolina to order, in the first place, because he is making a speech, when the Senator from Arkansas has the floor, and in the second place, because he has no right to advise the Democracy. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MANGUM. I will not attempt to do so absurd and useless a thing as to advise the great and wise and economical Democracy. I think that they will not learn wisdom from advice, proceeding from such a quarter; yet it might not be wholly thrown away if they were to hear it and act upon it. I admit that, under the Democratic rule, the Government has run up to a degree of expenditure unexampled in the history of the country. I am glad to see one stern, gallant, and intrepid man—though comparatively a young member—step forward and lecture his seniors. I hope they will profit by it. I hope the Treasury of the United States will profit by it. I hope the people of the country will profit by it. Sir, I have witnessed a great deal of this profession. I have recently heard of an eminent gentleman, who has my highest respect, a gentleman from Pennsylvania, saying that the Government ought to be brought back to the old Jeffersonian days. But when I looked at him mounted in his saddle, with his spurs on, ready to run the next presidential race, I thought that extravagance and spoils would distance him. I admit that the whole system is tending to corruption, and I fear it is ultimately to uproot the institutions of the country from its ancient principles. Extravagance can beat Economy any day in a public race. The spoils, the $50,000,000 that are to go into the pockets of the office-seekers—seekers of jobs and all the et cetera—afford the means by which the public money can be taken from the public purse and be put into individual purses. Sir, you and I, though yet young men, have lived long enough to have witnessed an every day state of things that pass here as a matter of course; things that are sustained by our Democratic friends everywhere; things that are now passed as a matter of course, which, thirty years ago, would not have received a second thought in either branch of the Legislature.

I commend the example, and the advice of my friend from Arkansas to his Democratic brethren. I hope they will profit by his counsels. I hope the country will be benefited by them. As far as I can, in a very humble way, I hope to put my shoulders to the wheel and cordially cooperate with him. I said I only wanted to express my gratification at the remarks of the honorable Senator, and to congratulate the Democracy that so gallant, so stern, so intrepid a man has been found who will come forward and lecture the evil-doers who have been squandering the public means. I think, though, the lecture was wrongly applied, as regards the other end of the avenue. Any money that is paid out, is paid out under the warrant of law. I suppose my friend would not have the Executive do otherwise than that. Whatever may be said of the present Executive, any assumption of doubtful power, any usurpation of power, anything that exceeds the Constitution and statutes, cannot be imputed to him, successfully at least. A more abiding and subservient Administration to the laws and Constitution, this country has not produced since the days of Washington. But I am not going into that now; I have no feeling for it now. But I will ask the Senate to indulge me, on a future occasion, to review a few of the very excellent propositions which have been thrown out by the Senator from Arkansas, and let us compare notes, running back thirty or forty years. It may be useful; for really we seem to have forgotten, in the possession of power, as the Democratic party is, in both branches of Congress, the point for which we set out. We know not where we are. We are upon the broad sea, under Democratic gales, which are blowing us whether upon rocks or quick-sands, I know not. Sir, I hardly think that those Democratic gales will bring the party into port on the next trial. I think we have a horse in training, which, if we put him in a good condition and have him well mounted, without too many officious grooms, will not only beat in the next presidential sweepstake any that may be brought to the post against him, but throw his competitor far behind even the distance flag. I give way that the honorable Senator from Michigan may proceed with his speech. I shall vote for the postponement of this subject. I hope the Senate will indulge me on some convenient occasion to review, at more length, the excellent speech, and still more excellent doctrines, of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to say one word, lest the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina, kindly intended, I have no doubt—

Mr. MANGUM. They were. I have great respect for the Senator.

Mr. BORLAND. —should place me in a false position before the country and before my party. He has represented me here as a Goliath. I had rather, on this occasion, and on any other occasion, occupy, as far as my humble ability would permit me, the position of David, who was a very small individual, and very feeble in himself, but in whose hands, when inspired with truth, and in a just cause, with his simple instrument of a sling, the pebble of truth was successful in striking the Goliath of the enemy. I did not rise for the purpose of lecturing the party to which I belong. My position in the country is too humble, and I am too young a Senator, to undertake to stand up here and assume the position of a leader or lecturer of my party. I am an humble soldier in the ranks. I simply rose to speak of the motives and considerations which govern me, and to express, not so much for Senators as for my constituents—for I believe we all speak somewhat for Buncombe—the ground upon which I stood, and to show them that not only had I made these pledges, and fought the battle with them at home upon these principles, but that I have felt, as their representative, it my duty to fight the battle upon this more elevated and more extended field.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. CASS rose and addressed the Senate for near an hour in favor of the bill, and was followed by Mr. DOWNS on the same side.

Mr. BRODHEAD addressed the Senate against the bill.

After Mr. BRODHEAD concluded, The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 15, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of the States for petitions.

ADDITIONAL PAGES.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution.

It was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be authorized, with the consent of the Speaker, to appoint three additional pages on the floor of the House.

There was no objection, and the resolution was introduced.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state, with regard to this resolution, as it is one introduced by myself, that I have offered it for the purpose of facilitating the business of the House, and for the convenience of the members. There are but twelve pages on the floor of the House, under the existing resolution; yet that number has to wait upon the two hundred and thirty-seven members and delegates in this House. To judge of this matter, on the grounds of necessity and economy, as we may do in some measure by reference to the state of things in the other branch of Congress, I will state that that body have eleven pages to wait upon only sixty-two gentlemen. Now, if we were to have upon that basis a number in proportion to the number of gentlemen upon whom they have to wait, we should have forty-two pages upon this floor instead of twelve. I ask now whether, under this state of facts, it is unreasonable that this House should have fifteen pages? It is the experience, at least, of those occupying the back seats, if not those upon the front seats, that they have very often to wait a quarter of an hour before they can get a page to attend upon them, upon matters connected with the public business. It is very often even found necessary to send upon the business of the members one of the door-keepers who is placed to guard the entrance of this Hall. Under these circumstances, I believe that the resolution, increasing the number from twelve to fifteen, ought to be passed. I call the previous question upon the passage of the resolution, and upon that motion demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KING, of New York, and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 28; no quorum voting.

Several MEMBERS. Call the roll!

The SPEAKER. There is no rule by which the roll can be called in the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present certain resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I should like to know what disposition has been made of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. There can be no business transacted until it is ascertained that there is a quorum present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the resolution on the table, and upon that motion I call the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to know how the gentleman from Tennessee can make that motion?

The SPEAKER. According to the regular order of proceeding, it must first be ascertained whether there is a quorum.

[Cries of "Recount!"" "Recount!"]

THE SPEAKER. With unanimous consent another count may be had.

There was no objection, and the tellers again resumed their places.

The question was again taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 25.

So the previous question received a second; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I now move to lay the resolution on the table, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I beg to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether there is any difference between voting against the passage of the resolution, and voting to lay it upon the table? Let him call the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution, if he desires them.

MR. JONES. I have no objection to that. If the gentleman desires it, I will withdraw the motion to lay upon the table, and call for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the question being taken, the result was—yeas 75, nays 91—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, William Appleton, Ashe, Bartlett, Bennett, Bibb, Bingham, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Cottom, Cullom, Dawson, Doty, Duncan, Edmundson, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Haws, Henn, Holladay, Thomas M. Howe, James Johnson, George G. King, Martin, McCorkle, McDonald, Morrison, Nabers, Newton, Orr, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Porter, Price, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Allison, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Beacock, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dimmick, Dockery, Dunham, Durkee, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Giddings, Goodenow, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mason, McLanahan, McMullen, McNair, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Millson, Molony, John Moore, Murray, Olds, Peaslee, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Riddle, Robbins, Ross, Smith, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Abram P. Stevens, Stratton, George W. Thompson, Townshend, Tuck, Watkins, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—91.

So the resolution was rejected.

MR. JOHNSON. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the House rejected that resolution.

I make that motion for the purpose of stating to the House a few facts in relation to this matter. I do not believe the House fully understand that resolution, or they would not refuse to pass it. I will prelude that statement, however, by saying, that during my connection with this or any preceding Congress, I have never refused, by my votes, to take my share of the responsibility in giving to this House, and to its business, every facility that could possibly be required. I do not fear, in going before my constituents, being attacked upon the subject of mileage, or the passage of any pitiful object of expenditure like the present, for the convenience of the members of the House, for which some gentlemen seem so fearful to vote.

Now, under the present law of the House, as I remarked on introducing this resolution, we have twelve pages, while we have two hundred and thirty-seven gentlemen to be waited on. Boys have been recalled from the folding-room attached to this House, where they ought to be attending to their appropriate duties, to perform the duties legitimately belonging to the pages of the House. But in addition to this, it often happens—as every gentleman here has seen, or, at least, I have the testimony of those who have seen—that there are times, for a quarter of an hour, when you cannot find a single, solitary page upon this floor.

Now, if gentlemen will not vote this addition of three to the number of pages, increasing the whole number from twelve to fifteen, it must be from some mistaken idea in regard to the economy of the measure. Some gentlemen decline to vote for this resolution for that reason, and yet I will venture to say, these same gentlemen will send off the pages from the House to various parts of the city to attend to their own private business, and then say we have enough. We have not enough, sir. I do not object to their sending them upon their own private business; for they are here for that purpose, in order that the gentlemen themselves may retain their seats in the Hall and attend to the public business. But twelve of these men have only to send each a page to attend to his own business, and there is not one left upon the floor.

There is another inconvenience connected with the subject. It is this: Members who are here must be served. And when they cannot find a page, a doorkeeper is the next best man, and the very officer who is placed here for the maintenance of order in this Hall, is sent away from his position to do the business of a single member.

Under these circumstances, an increase of force is asked, and of how many? Why, of three. I have mentioned in regard to the Senate. I know that all kinds of reproaches have been dealt against the Senate on account of extravagance, but it is impossible that they should be so utterly unreasonable in this matter. But if you will go into that Hall, you will find that with sixty-two members only, they have eleven pages to serve them. Then come into this Hall, and you find that with two hundred and thirty-seven members and delegates, and with a much greater area to travel over, we have but twelve pages. Now, work it out by the rule of three, if you please, and you will find that upon the senatorial basis of eleven pages to sixty-two, it would give us, for the two hundred and thirty-seven members, forty-two pages. Why, sir, there were formerly but eight pages allowed to this House. Mr. John Quincy Adams, during his last term in this House, I think, introduced a resolution, which was passed, to increase the number four, that is, from eight to twelve. This was rendered necessary by the increase of members, and business.

As I remarked in the outset, I have made this motion to reconsider for the purpose of setting these facts before the House, and for the purpose of showing that it is reasonable that these additional pages should be appointed. Now, I hope gentlemen will give every vote that is necessary to facilitate them in their business, and to extend that convenience to the members which the circumstances of the case render necessary, and that it will not again be rejected from any pitiful notion of economy.

MR. BROWN, of Mississippi. For the information of the members of the House, I will state that two of the boys acting upon this floor as pages, are not pages in point of fact. They stay here by the mere permission of the doorkeeper. They are connected with the folding-room, but they were needed here, and they were brought here accordingly. They are not authorized to be here by any existing resolution of the House, and are therefore not entitled to compensation. They may be sent away, or withdrawn, at any moment they think proper. If gentlemen suppose that there are more boys than ought to be here, then they need not pass this resolution. But if these boys stay here, and are necessary for the convenience of the members, then let them be covered by this resolution. If they are not proper boys, why, as a matter of course, the Doorkeeper and Speaker will dismiss them, and put others in their places. I wish it to be understood that if the resolution is voted down, you subject yourselves to the inconvenience of having two of the boys now here withdrawn.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I have not, sir, obtained the floor because I feel that any of the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] apply to me.

MR. JOHNSON. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] that I did not design to apply any portion of my remarks to him. If he has understood it so, he is mistaken.

MR. JONES. I knew the gentleman could not so intend. He has been here a sufficient length of time to know, at least, that I am not in the category of those who dodge responsibility—of those who vote against a measure because a clamor may be raised in their district for voting for a measure to which the constituency may be opposed. Sir, perhaps not one in a hundred of my constituents know how many pages there are upon this floor. I do not know that there is even that number of them who know that we have pages. [Laughter.] I am certain I have never heard the subject mentioned by any candidate in my district, or any of that class of subjects. Certainly I have never alluded to them; and perhaps I have as little to fear or to anticipate as any one else, from his constituents upon this subject. I have the proud consolation to know, whether deservedly or not, that I have, for the period of nearly twenty years, enjoyed the confidence of my constituents. My course here is dictated, I feel confident in saying, by what I believe to be right, regardless of consequences.

Now, sir, I voted against the resolution which has been rejected. And why did I so vote? Because I believe, from my experience upon this floor, that an increase of the number of pages is uncalled for by the public service. If I am correct in my information, there are now twelve pages upon this floor, authorized by the resolution of the House, and appointed by the Doorkeeper. What are the legitimate and appropriate duties of these boys? To run on errands and messages through the city? No, sir. Their legitimate duty is to be here upon this floor, and to carry papers from the members to the Clerk's table, and in going back and forward through the House and to the post office on members' business, and in folding their papers when they desire, and in doing anything here which members may think proper.

Now, sir, I have perhaps as little use for the services of pages as any other individual upon this floor. I call upon them as seldom, perhaps, as any member upon this floor, and I do say, that so far as my observation goes, that the twelve pages are a sufficient number to do all the legitimate duties required of them. Suppose that occasionally, once in a week or once in a month, the boys may all be employed, and each member who may want the services of a page cannot for the moment command them, would it not be better to subject ourselves to that slight inconvenience, rather than have a superabundance of them upon the floor, and nearly all the time in the way? Now, we have been informed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] that there are two boys here who are not appointed under the resolution of the House. There are twelve pages who are appointed, and perhaps if we shall pass this resolution to appoint the three additional ones, the Doorkeeper, having some favorites to bring in, may turn out some of the boys who have been here associated with the members, and who will, when they learn that they are to be turned out, excite the sympathies of the members, and then application will be made to increase the number, in order that the Doorkeeper may retain their services.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If there is any such case as that, I have never heard of it; and I do not believe there is such a case, and I never will believe it until the gentleman shall state that there is such a case.

MR. JONES. I do not know of such a case; but it is said that there are two boys who have been here all the session without pay, and were here during the last Congress, and are to be turned out now unless there can be an increase of the number.

MR. JOHNSON. Then I will state to the gentleman in regard to his statement about the Doorkeeper turning out some and putting in others, that it has nothing at all to do with this resolution; and I will ask the gentleman to say what it has to do with the resolution, because the Doorkeeper can, in any event, retain or turn them out at his pleasure. I am authorized to contradict any impression that may exist even from inference, and to say that there is no such case, for the Doorkeeper does not threaten to turn out a single one of them.

MR. JONES. I know of two pages in the last Congress, who, having been superseded by the present Doorkeeper, have been on the floor during the present session.

MR. JOHNSON. I think it is probable that there are a dozen who have been superseded. I do not know but that the whole of the present number are new pages. There is but one, if any, waiting for reappointment under the resolution.

MR. MASON. There have been applications made to me by two boys who were here during the last Congress, and have been here this month for pay. They were superseded, I understand, but remained here, and offer to serve the House, if they can be permitted to stay, for $25 a month instead of $60, which is the usual compensation of pages. You can procure five hundred boys in town to serve for $25 a month.

Mr. JOHNSON. In regard to that one, (pointing at a page in front of the Clerk's desk,) I will state that he never was in here until this session. So my friend from Kentucky [Mr. Mason] is mistaken in that case.

Mr. MASON. We told them we had no authority to pay them, and that the House had the control of the whole thing. I happen to be upon the Committee of Accounts, where I find out that there are a number of persons who have a number of boys, more than they have any employment for, and they are at me daily and hourly to get them employment; and because I am chairman of the Committee of Accounts, they seem to suppose that I have particular influence with the officers of the House. They are smart, intelligent, clever, active boys, who would like to get $80 a month, and $200 or $250 at the end of the session.

So far as these boys are needed by the House for the public service, I go, as the gentleman from Tennessee does, [Mr. Jones,] for their appointment. Those who are employed now are good, patient, active, and intelligent boys, and will be, when they get experienced, fully able to perform all the duties required by the House. Most of the old ones were turned out; but these are improving every day, and doubtless will render, after a little more experience, all the service that the gentleman from Arkansas desires of them; and I suppose that we need no more. That is my judgment of the matter. There are hundreds and thousands seeking employment, and I wish everybody had $25 or $50 a month, [laughter;] but I do not think we ought to put every one upon the contingent fund of this House. The number is already enormous. We have forty different clerks in this House who are paid out of it already.

Mr. JONES. I concur with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Mason,] and would rejoice if all these boys could be employed. We have them here, and they are an active, sprightly, and as accommodating as any I have ever seen in the House; but I must act upon my judgment and conviction, that twelve is a sufficient number for the business of this House, and I cannot consent to vote for this resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the minds of members are made up upon the resolution, and wanting to proceed to some business, which I can only do to-day, I call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was sustained, and the main question ordered.

Mr. FOWLER moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. JONES demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 79, nays 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Allison, Averett, Babcock, Barrere, Beale, Buell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Daniel, John G. [A message was here received from the Senate at the hands of ASBURY DICKENS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House of the passage, by that body, of certain bills.]

The question recurred on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, demanded the previous question, which received a second; and the main question, being the motion to reconsider, was ordered to be now put.

Mr. JONES demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to reconsider, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Andrews, John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Bartlett, Bell, Bennett, Bibbighaus, John H. So the vote was reconsidered.

The question now being upon the adoption of the resolution,

Mr. PICKLIN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMULLIN. I understood from some gentleman that if the motion was reconsidered, that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] would modify his resolution somewhat. This I understood, not from the gentleman himself, but from another member. Was there such an understanding?

Mr. JOHNSON. With the unanimous consent of the House, I will modify the resolution so that, instead of there being added three to the number of pages, provided for by the resolution, there shall be exactly the number we have now upon the floor. If I have unanimous consent, I will make that modification, and not otherwise.

There was no objection to the modification. The yeas and nays were not ordered; upon a division there being—ayes 24, nays 114.

Mr. McMULLIN demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. KING, of New York. It has been reconsidered once.

The SPEAKER. It having been reconsidered once, it is not competent to reconsider it a second time.

Mr. PHELPS rose to a privileged question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent of the House, to offer some resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was going to make an appeal to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] to let me have the floor to make a motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union. If the gentleman from Missouri shall call up the contested election case, as a privileged question, it will consume the whole of the time accorded by the House to the consideration of the deficiency bill, to which I directed attention a few days since.

Mr. PHELPS. In reply to the suggestion of my friend from Alabama, I have to say that it is right this question should be disposed of soon. It is liable to be called up at any time, and it may be in my absence.

CLAIMS OF MILITARY OFFICERS.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If the gentleman will allow me, I appeal to the House for its unanimous consent to take up, from the Speaker's table, Senate bill No. 44, and refer it to the Military Committee. It is a bill providing for the settlement of claims of officers, who received money during the Mexican war. One distinguished officer (General Riley) has been here at a high personal expense, for two or three months. It is a matter of importance to him, that this bill should be acted upon. There can be no objection to its being taken up and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection.

The bill, being an act in addition to, and amendatory of, an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of accounts of public officers and others, who may have received moneys arising from military contributions or otherwise in Mexico," approved the 3d of March, 1849, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STANTON. I have in my hands memorials and petitions, which I desire to submit and have referred to a committee.

CONTESTED ELECTION FROM NEW MEXICO.

Mr. PHELPS. I cannot yield further, I must insist upon going on with my privileged question.

On the other day I presented to the House the memorial of A. W. Reynolds, contesting the right of the present Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. WRIGHTMAN] to a seat upon this floor. At that time, I did not propose to enter into a discussion of the merits of the question; nor do I at this moment, for I will do nothing.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the gentleman from Missouri, I will interrupt him. I was not here when the gentleman submitted his remarks a few days ago, upon the introduction of the memorial relative to the right of the present Delegate from New Mexico to his seat; and if the whole merits of the proposition shall be gone into upon the introduction of the memorial and upon its reference to a committee for the purpose of inquiring into the matter, it seems to me that the whole time of the ensuing week will be consumed. If the debate has not proceeded so far as that the gentleman will be compelled to pursue it further, I would be glad, if it would comport with his notions as well as those of the Delegate, to let the reference be made without delay. Then, upon the report of that committee, the whole merits of the question can be discussed.

Mr. PHELPS. I will give a word of explanation to my friend from Alabama, and it is this: when I presented the memorial, I confined myself briefly to the allegations contained in it. I submitted it under the rule which requires a member, presenting a petition, to succinctly state its points. After having done that, I moved that the memorial be referred to the Committee of Elections and be printed; and upon that I remarked, as charges had been made against Governor Calhoun of corrupt interference in the elections in New Mexico, that I proposed to submit a few words in relation to that matter. That is the condition of the case. I had not previous to that time intended to have said anything in relation to the right of the gentleman from New Mexico to a seat upon this floor. I did not desire to do anything which might prejudice his interests. At a subsequent time, not being present, the gentleman from New Mexico desired to debate this matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand, then, that my friend from Missouri has not gone into the discussion that will necessarily grow up connected with the right of the Delegate to occupy a seat upon this floor. And his proposition now, if I understand it correctly, is, that he will go into a discussion of the charges which have been made against the Governor of that Territory with reference to corrupt interferences by him in the elections of New Mexico. If the gentleman from Missouri persists in that course of argument, I desire to submit to the Chair this point of order—whether in the House, in reference to memorials contesting the right of the Delegate from New Mexico to his seat, it is in order to discuss the corruptions charged against the Governor of that Territory? My object in doing so is to save time, which I desire to be appropriated to other business. I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the gentleman from Alabama, the Chair would remark that a motion is made to commit and to print, which, in the opinion of the Chair, must open up whatever connects itself with the right of the sitting member.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is true. I do not pretend to question the right of the Delegate or of the gentleman to discuss everything connected with his right to his seat; but my friend proposes to discuss charges of corruption against the Governor of that Territory.

The SPEAKER. That is connected, as the gentleman from Alabama will remember.

Mr. PHELPS. With the elections of that Territory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order as at present presented.

Mr. PHELPS. After the interruption of my friend from Alabama, I proceed to advert to the charge which is made in the memorial upon the point which I now propose to discuss. The second allegation charges the Governor of New Mexico:

"Your memorialist charges that the Governor of New Mexico exercised a corrupt influence in the Territory generally, in favor of the Delegate who is returned as elected, both previous to and during the pendency of the election."

I entertain the opinion that if there is evidence tending to show that this charge is substantiated or could be substantiated—that the Governor of one of the Territories of the United States has interfered in the elections which have taken place in the Territory of which he is the chief magistrate—that it is a matter of proper animadversion upon the part of the legislative department of this Government. The only redress which can be administered is that made at the other end of the avenue, by the decapitation of that man who will prostitute his official station for the purpose of promoting party purposes and party views. On the other day, when this memorial was presented, a gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JOHNSON] inquired of me what evidence I had of a corrupt interference upon the part of the Governor of that Territory in elections. I do not come here with legal testimony taken in the court of justice or before a judicial officer, but I propose to speak of public acts and public proceedings which have taken place in that Territory and under the very nose of the Governor, which thus far have been permitted to go uncontradicted, or at any rate, not contradicted in the manner in which these charges were made against him. If I find a gentleman of respectability charging that a man has been interfering in elections, I do not desire to inquire into the legality of the testimony; and if I am satisfied that that gentleman is a man of respectability and truth, I have the right here to use that evidence and consider it legal. The gentleman from Georgia assents to that proposition; and that is the kind of evidence with which I am prepared and fortified upon this occasion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask him the names of the witnesses whose testimony he relies upon to establish the validity of these charges?

Mr. PHELPS. I will present them in their proper order, and I think to the entire satisfaction of my friend from Georgia. I do not propose to conceal anything in relation to this matter. As the interference of the Governor is the only point under consideration, and the honorable Delegate from New Mexico the other day declared that he could not sit still any longer when charges of this kind had been made against the Governor of that Territory, I have only to say, that the gentleman is more anxious for the defense of the Governor's reputation than the Governor himself. I know that it is one thing for the Governor of New Mexico to stand fair with this Administration—with the appointing power which may decapitate him; but it is immaterial for his own party purposes as to how he stands with the people of New Mexico. I am, to a certain extent, made acquainted with this transaction from the fact that of the American born citizens residing in that Territory, I presume more than one half—probably two thirds—have been residents of the State of Missouri, and many of them residents of my district. I know somewhat, therefore, of their reputation—of their standing before they emigrated to that Territory. Of the others I have learned from many of my constituents, who, when having returned, spoke of the transactions which had occurred, and of the gentleman who figured in the political affairs of that Territory. In this way I have obtained information of the character and the standing of citizens of New Mexico.

I desire now to advert to the proceedings of a public meeting held in the city of Santa Fé shortly after the election of the Delegate to Congress, which was attended by some of the most influential citizens of New Mexico—American born citizens. These individuals went further than a mere participation in the proceedings of the meeting, and signed a manuscript containing all the allegations made in the resolutions passed at that meeting.

There were other matters considered in that meeting. A respected citizen of that Territory—a gentleman who emigrated from Missouri—had been brutally murdered in the county of Bernalillo, and there was a meeting of the citizens called to take that matter into consideration. They demanded an interference on the part of the Executive, to cause those persons who had been charged with the murder of Mr. Skinner to be brought to justice. I will not advert to the hearing between the committee of citizens of New Mexico and the Governor, when they appeared before him to make known their complaints. Upon their reporting to the meeting which had then been assembled, after the interview with the Governor, certain resolutions were adopted. Let me tell the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JOHNSON] I will speak of the character of some of those men who participated in the proceedings of that meeting. Preston Beck, jr., was the presiding officer. I do not see the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN], who has informed me of the character of that gentleman—a gentleman of high respectability and character in the State of Indiana, from which he emigrated. He gave character to the proceedings of this meeting. A gentleman by the name of St. Vrain was also present, who was born in the State of Missouri—a trader for a long time in that Territory—a gentleman of respectability. The committee reporting the resolutions consisted in part of Messrs. Brent, Folger, Webb, and Tuley—gentlemen of respectability in that Territory. This meeting was held the 25th day of September last, and here are three of the resolves which were passed upon that occasion:

"3. That the attempt, in such a country as New Mexico, to bring executive authority into conflict with the freedom of elections, is attended with peculiar dangers; that it sets free a spirit of license which, once inflamed, knows no stopping point short of the extremest violence; and that any Governor of this Territory who, from personal motives and private objects, so exerts his authority, is too ignorant of the elements with which he is dealing, or too reckless of consequences, to be intrusted with such authority a day beyond that in which he can be removed from the place which he so abuses.

"4. That it is the opinion of this meeting, and, as we believe of nine tenths of the American citizens of this Territory, that the course pursued by James S. Calhoun, the present Governor of this Territory, is such a course as we have denounced in the foregoing resolution; that the effect, if not the intention, of the movements he has set on foot, as we believe, for his own aggrandizement, is to confirm instead of softening the prejudices with which the Americans are naturally regarded by their Mexican fellow-citizens, and is calculated to produce the most injurious influences upon the best interests and solid prosperity of this Territory, by tending to make it impossible for Americans to live in it.

"5. That we know not where to look for relief, except at the hands of the President and Congress of the United States; that we implore them to take into consideration a condition of affairs which is not only so threatening to the comfort, safety, and lives of the American citizens of this Territory, but which, if not amended, will prove fatal to every hope of improvement and progress in it. That we do not presume to dictate the mode by which such a deplorable condition shall be amended; but we respectfully suggest that a change at the head of the government here, by the substitution of a clear-headed and honest man, of upright purposes, free from personal ambition, and keeping steadily in view the real interests of this country, would be one mode by which a reform, not only so desirable, but of most urgent necessity, may be accomplished."

These resolves, in substance, charge that James S. Calhoun, Governor of the Territory of New Mexico, has brought executive authority into conflict with the freedom of elections for the purpose of his own aggrandizement—the basest of all motives; and by so doing he is jeopardizing the peace, security, and lives of the American citizens. The exercise of his authority in interfering in the elections for his personal aggrandizement, is a corrupt interference; and thus the charge contained in the memorial is fully sustained. This conduct calls for rebuke and condemnation, and is my excuse for commenting on it. A remedy can be easily provided—his removal; and that remedy can be administered by the Chief Magistrate of this nation.

I ask if this evidence is not satisfactory to my friend from Georgia, [Mr. JOHNSON]; and if it is not sufficient for me to declare, upon the assertion of these respectable gentlemen, that the Governor of New Mexico has interfered in the freedom of elections? I ask you, then, if the allegation contained in the memorial of the contestant, that the Governor had exerted a corrupt influence, is not also true? There seems to be a party which he must subserve. There were certain things which, it seems, this executive must endeavor to promote—they may, perhaps, (though not probable,) be for the interest of the people, or they may be for his own private advancement and aggrandizement—which causes him to exercise his influence at the hustings, to have some person returned to the Legislative Department to do his will and bidding. I have before me a copy of a letter which has been addressed by certain citizens of New Mexico to the President of the United States—where they make the same complaint which is contained in this memorial, and upon which I am speaking—bringing several other accusations against him. I do not propose to advert to the others. I only propose to advert to what they say in relation to the interference of the Governor in the elections of that Territory. This letter is signed by William S. Messervy, known to those who were members of the last Congress, as a gentleman who was attending here, claiming to be the Representative of the State of New Mexico, when the gentleman [Mr. WEIGHTMAN] from New Mexico appeared with his credentials, claiming his seat in the Senate as a Senator from that State. It is also signed by a gentleman of the name of Houghton, who was appointed one of the judges of New Mexico, under the code which was established for the government and regulation of affairs in New Mexico by General Kearny, at the time of its conquest, and held that office until the establishment of the territorial government. It is also signed by the contestant in this case, James S. Collins, formerly a resident of the State of Missouri; but who, for the last six or seven years, has been a resident of New Mexico; also, by Messrs. Johnson, McGorty, Tullis, and Quinn. Some two or three of these gentlemen, whose names are subscribed to this letter, have been residents of the State of Missouri, and with their reputation and standing while residing there, I am well acquainted. Their reputation and standing were good—their veracity unquestioned. I now propose to read some extracts from this letter. They remark:

"Governor Calhoun recently caused, by proclamation, an election to be held in the county of Rio Arriba, to fill a vacancy in the legislative body. Two candidates were placed before the people—one by the 'Governor's party,' the other by the 'Independent party.' This the issue was fairly made up, and the election was to take place on the 3d of November. A few days before the election was held, a second vacancy occurred, by resignation of another member. The Governor, well advised of the strength of parties in that county, and aware that, in a fair contest, his candidate would not be elected, without hesitation resorted to one of his usual unscrupulous tricks to carry his point. He did not issue his proclamation for election to fill the second vacancy, but merely sent a written request to the Judge of Probate of the county, requesting him to have two candidates voted for. This letter was dated on the 28th of October, but could not have reached the Judge of Probate before the evening of the 30th of that month; and as the election was to be held on the 3d of November, no candidates could have reached the people, and consequently, no candidates were brought on for the second vacancy. [The law requires that proclamation shall be given of all elections ten days before the election.]

"The election took place, and the 'Independent' candidate was elected by over one hundred majority, and the defeated candidate of the Governor's party came in for the second vacancy, and was declared elected, permitted to take his seat, and served during the session—was, in effect, created a member of the Legislature by appointment of the Governor."

The law requires—and I have a copy of the election law of that Territory—that a proclamation shall be issued by the Governor, ordering the Probate Judge of the county where the vacancy occurs to issue his writ of election. The Probate Judge is required to give ten days' notice of the election, by public proclamation and by handbills, to be posted up at the most public places in each precinct, announcing the object of the election, officers to be voted for, and the place where said election is to be held. No complaint is made of that election as far as filling the vacancy which first occurred. But a second vacancy in the Territorial Legislature occurred. The Governor is required to see that the laws of that Territory are faithfully executed. Disregarding the law, the substance of which applicable to this case I have stated, the Governor sends a letter to the Probate Judge of the county of Rio Arriba, (so say these gentlemen, and I have no doubt of the fact,) informing him that a second vacancy has occurred in the representation from that county, and requesting him to have the second vacancy filled at the special election then about to take place. He does not give the Probate Judge time to comply with the election law. The legal notice cannot be given; the people of the county cannot be apprised of the fact that an election for the second vacancy will take place. The independent candidate is elected by a majority of more than one hundred, and the candidate of the Governor's party—the defeated party—is, by some legerdemain, transferred to the Legislature to fill the second vacancy. Well may these gentlemen say the Governor created a member of the Legislature. This whole proceeding was irregular and illegal, from its inception to its conclusion. It was a wanton disregard and flagrant violation of law. It of itself establishes the charge of a corrupt interference in the elections.

I propose to read another extract from this letter. These gentlemen remark:

"In summing up the above, we charge the Governor with using the high and responsible position he occupies in fermenting disorder among the mixed portion of the inhabitants of our Territory, and pandering to the passions and prejudices of a people (already excited to feelings of deadly hatred by the aggressions of the war) against the American-born citizens, residents among them, thereby jeopardizing life and property, destroying the best interests of the Territory, and retarding the development of its resources. A war of the races—in other words, a sanguinary civil conflict—will, we fear, be the bitter fruits of his wanton, reckless, and selfish policy, if longer permitted to pursue it.

"Instead of making himself the Governor of the Territory, he has set himself up as the head of a party, known and recognized by himself and friends as the Governor's party; rallying around him a corrupt Catholic priesthood, and a few wealthy Mexicans in the Territory. With these instruments, he has obtained a Legislature subservient to his purposes, and has filled all the subordinate offices of the Territory with creatures who acknowledge no law but his will; thus rendering the elective franchise of no avail, and destroying the hopes entertained by the friends of liberal institutions, of elevating a people to the rank and privileges of American citizens who, for two centuries, had been suffering from the effects of an arbitrary and despotic rule. Instead of giving them examples of political propriety, and teaching them the value of political integrity, he has encouraged them in the practice of all that is mean in political chicanery, and protected them in the perpetration of perjury and murder.

"In bringing about this deplorable condition of affairs for the purpose of making the government of the remote Territory of New Mexico a unit, and that unit himself, he has cut himself off from nearly the entire portion of the American population, and now stands at the mercy of those whom he has gathered around him; depriving himself of all power to do good, should he repent himself of his selfish aims, and be disposed to reform the people whom he has made more corrupt and insubordinate than he found them. Thus all is confusion and ruin. We have no quiet, no safety, no security. We have law, but it cannot be enforced. Those of his party may commit any crime their interests or their passions dictate. He must protect them, or fall. The consequence of his miserable and mistaken policy has been, that outrages the most execrable and crimes the most horrible have, in many instances, been resolved into political affairs, and dealt with or not dealt with, according to partisan considerations. So long as the General Government send us such officers, who work for the building up of a party or a particular interest, rather than attend to the interests of our people, we shall have but little cause of gratitude for her maternal care."

I have now produced that kind of evidence upon which these charges have been based. I know nothing in relation to these transactions, of my own personal knowledge. I have never been in the Territory. But I speak from information obtained from gentlemen of respectability. They have been willing to place their charges in a tangible and unmistakable form, and they not only charge on the Governor of that Territory, corrupt interference in the elections and internal affairs of the Territory, but they also charge him with combining with the Mexicans for the purpose of prostrating the American-born citizens who are there. I trust that, as I have referred to this letter, giving the names subscribed to it, and which is a copy of one which has been submitted to the President of the United States for his consideration, I have presented evidence sufficient to justify me in everything I have said in relation to the conduct of the Governor of New Mexico.

As I remarked the other day, so far as concerns the right of the gentleman from New Mexico to a seat upon this floor, I had no desire, nor have I now, to say anything. The Governor of that Territory may have been guilty of all which has been charged upon him, and which I have brought evidence here to-day for the purpose of substantiating; and still the right of the gentleman from New Mexico to a seat on this floor may not be affected by it. It was only in consequence of a desire, on the part of the gentleman from New Mexico, to have an opportunity of defending the Governor of the Territory which he represents, that I felt disposed to present these charges to the House, believing, at the same time, that, in so doing, I was doing my duty as a legislator; and that this House, looking to the good of the whole country, and particularly of the people of New Mexico, might be able to judge whether Governor Calhoun can promote the interests of this Government by remaining any longer at the head of the executive department of that Territory. For, sir, it must be recollected that this Governor of the Territory, also fills another very important office; he is ex officio Superintendent of Indian Affairs for that Territory, and is authorized by the Government of the United States to negotiate treaties—if it is necessary that treaties shall be negotiated—with the Indian tribes in that Territory. If, then, he has improperly discharged the duties of his office as Governor, are we not warranted in the supposition that, on coming to examine into the Indian affairs of the Territory, we may find that he has been guilty of improper conduct in the performance of those duties also?

I have thus briefly referred to the matters which I intended to present to the House. I would, the other day, very cheerfully have answered the inquiry propounded to me by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JOHNSON,] but I thought that in the absence of the gentleman from New Mexico—and I did not know he was not present when I rose to address the House—it was right to postpone this matter, relating to the affairs of New Mexico and its Governor, until he should be present to hear what I might have to say upon the subject.

One word more upon a matter to which I intended to advert. Captain Reynolds, the gentleman who is contesting the right of the Delegate from New Mexico to his seat upon this floor, has not presented evidence to substantiate the charges which he here makes, because he has received information from New Mexico that it has been impossible for the attorneys employed to take testimony in his behalf, in consequence of executive influence, to call together two alcaldes, or justices of the peace, for the purpose of taking the evidence at the times and places appointed. I will read a brief extract from a letter upon the subject, addressed to Judge Houghton by Mr. Pillars, a lawyer of that Territory:

"It is impossible to obtain the testimony for Reynolds. The Ex. [Executive] puts every obstacle in the way, and it is absolutely impossible to get two alcaldes together at the term that notice is given, and if taken illegally, W. [Weighman] would object. I have striven hard to effect it, and have done nothing at last."

This is the reason why the testimony does not accompany the memorial. Captain Reynolds was obliged to repair to this city, but he left the matter in the hands of two attorneys, whom he employed to attend to the taking of evidence for this contest. The presentation of the memorial has been delayed, in the expectation that the testimony would arrive in time to be presented to the House with the memorial.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was anxious, the other day, that this question of privilege in regard to the seat of the Delegate from New Mexico should come up, not for the purpose, as I then stated, of making any objection to the printing of that memorial and the accompanying papers, or to their reference to the Committee of Elections, but for the purpose of contradicting, promptly and at once, the gross charges which have been made against the honorable gentleman who is now Governor of New Mexico. I regret that he has not a better advocate than myself on this occasion. I regret that he has no forceful BRECKINRIDGE or brilliant MARSHALL to stand up here in his defense. But such as I am, I bring to this question the highest regard for that honorable gentleman, and admiration of his course in New Mexico. In my belief, the honorable Governor of New Mexico has pursued a course calculated to make the Mexicans—who have been separated from their Government by no act of theirs, and who now owe allegiance to the Government of the United States—feel that they are at least a part of this Government; that they have rights here that ought to be protected; and that the Government to which they belong was created by the people, and ought to be administered for their benefit. The elevation of policy and motives which distinguish the Governor of New Mexico, I believe is not appreciated, and cannot be appreciated by some of those who would injure and belie him. Against the Governor of New Mexico there have been arrayed divers and powerful influences. I think I am well enough acquainted with my countrymen to know, that when they understand that powerful influences are brought to bear against any individual, and that there is an attempt to crush a man who is in the discharge of high and honorable duties, the mere knowledge of that fact will make those influences powerless.

I shall allude, now, to one of those influences. I am about to read from a newspaper which, I understand, has the largest circulation of perhaps any paper in the Union; I mean the National Era. It is the number of February 26th, and the article is headed:

"SCOUNDRELISM IN OUR TERRITORIES—KIDNAPPING UNDER A GOVERNOR'S LICENSE.—We publish on our fourth page an editorial from the Deseret News, disclosing a state of things in our Territories which demands the immediate attention of the Chief Executive. According to the statement, Governor Calhoun of New Mexico is no better than an infamous kidnapper. Gangs of traders, with licenses bearing his name, authorizing them to purchase Indian children, as slaves, for the benefit of persons in New Mexico, have lately been driven out of the Territory of Utah. Bad as the Mormons are represented to be, they are not so devilish as to connive at this new trade in human blood, which a United States officer, appointed by Mr. Fillmore, seems ambitious to establish."

"The apprehension evidently prevails that proper attention to territorial grievances may lead to discussion on questions connected with slavery; and that any enlightened attempt to redress them, may involve, unavoidably, the exercise of a power over the Territories, which the compromise virtually abandoned."

"O, how this infernal element of evil—the slave power, obstructs all useful and beneficent legislation!"

Now, I wish to refer to the article from the Deseret News, to see how much authority the editor of the Era had for that statement:

"SLAVE TRADERS IN NEW MEXICO AND UTAH LICENSED BY GOVERNOR CALHOUN.—We find the following in the New York Herald:

"The United States officers who returned from Utah, have stated that persons were expelled from the Territory if they became obnoxious to the censure of the Mormon authorities. The following is a copy of an editorial article in the News, in relation to a regularly licensed trader, who it seems was not well regarded by the saints:

"A copy of a license given to Pedro Leon to trade with the Utah Indians, signed by James S. Calhoun, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, dated Santa Fé, August 14, 1851, attested by D. V. Whiting, has fallen under our observation; and we understand the said Pedro Leon was at Manti, in the county of San Pete, on or about the 3d instant, accompanied by about twenty Spanish Mexicans, trading and desiring to trade horses, for Indian children, firearms, &c.; and we are also informed that there are two other companies, of about the same size, and from the same source, one of whom holds a blank license, dated 'Executive Department, Santa Fé, New Mexico, July 30, 1851,' signed by 'J. S. Calhoun, Superintendent of Indian Affairs,' authorizing said blank holder to proceed to the Salt Lake county, in the Territory of Utah, for the purpose of trading with the Utah Indians in said region."

And that is all. He does not say for the purpose of trading for Indian children, as slaves.

There are other parts of this article which it is not necessary for me to read. But the Deseret News, the quoted authority of the Era, does not confirm the statement, that by the license of Governor Calhoun there has been authorized trade in children of any kind, notwithstanding the reckless and unscrupulous statement of the National Era. This is one of the influences to which I alluded. This influence, brought to bear against Governor Calhoun, may be traced in a kindred paper in Santa Fé, edited by a gentleman who is an agent of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, who does little else than malign the Government, the gallant Sumner, commanding the troops in New Mexico, and the humble individual who now addresses you. This society is a powerful one; and it is one of the chief influences which has been brought to bear against the Governor of that Territory.

To show the design of the National Era, in its reckless and unscrupulous statements in reference to Governor Calhoun, I wish to read a letter which I wrote at the request of General Foote. I wrote it early in the present session of Congress. I desire to read it in connection with the comments of the National Era, in which the editor makes the threat that I shall be made to feel for my contumacy, if I continue the course which I have thought proper to pursue. Here is the letter:

WASHINGTON, December 16th, 1851.

MY DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request, I give you my views as to the popular feeling concerning slavery in New Mexico.

The popular feeling in New Mexico is, I believe, fixedly set against that country being made the arena in which to decide political questions in which the people have no practical interest, and all attempts which have heretofore been made, or which hereafter may be made, to induce the people of that country to take sides on a question in which they are not at all interested, have been, and will, I trust, forever be, utterly abortive.

There are in New Mexico a few negroes, in all, as shown by the census, seventeen; and of this number there may be as many as five or six slaves—house-servants of officers of the Army and others.

There has, up to this time, before the judicial tribunals, been no case of a negro held to slavery suing for his freedom. When such a case shall occur, it will, in my opinion, be adjudicated without popular excitement of any kind, though the people are, I believe, opposed to the introduction of slave labor amongst themselves; and when the time shall come when they shall think proper to seek admission as a State of the Union, they will, I am inclined to think, should there be in their opinion danger of the introduction of slave labor there, prohibit it. But as there is at this time no such danger, there is no excitement on the subject; and as I see in the future no likelihood of the introduction of slave labor there, I apprehend that the popular mind will, as now, remain calm on this point, and the question of prohibiting, admitting, or remaining silent, concerning slavery, will be treated simply as a matter of policy in reference to being admitted into the Union.

To show the freedom from excitement of the people on this question, I refer you to the fact, that in the State constitution of New Mexico, of last year, though slavery was prohibited, the undersigned, though falsely denounced in the only newspaper in New Mexico as a slavery propagandist, was elected to the Senate by an overwhelming vote; and this, too, despite the general knowledge among the members of the Legislature that he was in favor of so arranging the slavery clause as to effect our admission into the Union, and without regard to any other circumstance whatsoever. I was confident that no constitutional provision could bring about the introduction of slave labor there; and, being satisfied with the substance, did not trouble myself about a prohibition of what could never affect us. And this, I believe, is the popular feeling in New Mexico.

We in New Mexico have suffered too much already, by having our soil made use of by others as a political battlefield over which to settle the slavery question, to again permit it to be so used if we can avoid it. It is, I believe, the fixed determination of the people to take no sides on this question which in no way practically concerns them. When the question comes up, we will treat it simply as a matter of policy, by which to facilitate our admission into the Union. Once admitted, we can do as we choose. We desire the friendship of all; and entangling alliances with none.

A vigorous effort was this year made to interest the people in this vexed question, but all in vain. A document entitled "Address to the Inhabitants of New Mexico and California, on the omission by Congress to provide them with Territorial Governments, and on the social and political evils of slavery," was industriously circulated in New Mexico, in the Spanish language, by an agent of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, who is at this time the editor of the "Santa Fé Gazette," in the columns of which paper he is republishing occasional chapters of this document. In this is drawn a comparison, more highly wrought than true, between the North and South in reference to state of education, state of morals, state of religion, disregard of human life, disregard of constitutional obligations, population, military weakness, &c. In the conclusion, the people are urged to set up an independent government, "unless exempted from the curse of slavery," and are promised, in that case, the assistance of the "whole North." I send you an English and a Spanish copy.

You will perceive that the unscrupulous persons who are urging the law-abiding New Mexicans to the commission of treason, and promising assistance they have no right to promise, have signed their names to the document.

This attempt to draw the simple, pastoral, and unarmed people of New Mexico into an act of treasonable resistance to the powerful Government to which they owe and yield allegiance, will meet with the profound indignation it deserves from all parts of the United States, but not more profound than the contempt it met with in New Mexico.

Though supported by the only newspaper in New Mexico, whose editor is, as I have stated, an agent of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, no excitement took place in New Mexico, outside of the immediate family of the editor, clothed though he was in the garb of a missionary—a minister of the Gospel—a minister of peace.

If there are any persons in the United States who desire to colonize slaves in our Territory, I apprehend there would be no objection on the part of the people of New Mexico, let the decision of the courts be what it may. Perhaps the attempt would be beneficial; it would at all events settle the question, and effectually thwart any further attempt to make New Mexico the scape-goat to bear the burden of a question which concerns her not. We object to being made the scape-goat, and would prefer not being made use of even as an illustration.

Should the courts in New Mexico decide that slaves may legally be held, then I am sure that no popular excitement would follow; and I am equally sure that those who embark in the colonizing experiment will speedily send or sell their slaves out of the Territory. Slave labor will not pay in New Mexico, and in that is comprised the whole question.

We desire to be in a position in which Congress, unembarrassed by the slavery question as regards us, may direct its attention to legislating so as to promote the interest of that neglected and sympathy-deserving section.

This letter I place at your disposition, to be used as you may think proper, though not written with that carelessness as regards periods, or with the compactness I would desire.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. WEIGHTMAN.

Hon. H. S. Foote, U. S. Senate.

I give this letter for the purpose of showing what are the sentiments, or the absence of sentiment, that the National Era takes ground against, and the reason for its hostility against me. On this letter the Era comments as follows, in its paper of January 1, 1852:

"MR. WEIGHTMAN AND NEW MEXICO.—Mr. Smith, former Delegate from New Mexico, was rejected by the Senate as nominee for the Secretaryship of the Territory, because he had once written an address to the people there, advising them to exclude slavery on economical grounds. He was a Kentuckian, the son of a slaveholder, and not an abolitionist. But he had offended against the majesty of slavery—and that was a deadly sin.

"His successor, R. H. Weightman, has taken warning, and bends the knee in time to the ruling power. In a letter from him, dated December 21st, 1851, to Mr. Foote, and read a few days ago in the Senate, he undertakes to vouch for the utter indifference of the New Mexicans on the question of slavery. He says they cannot be persuaded to take sides, and that all the arts of designing people to excite them against slavery have failed.

"To show," he says, "the freedom from excitement of the people on the question, I refer you to the fact that in the State constitution of New Mexico, of last year, though slavery was prohibited, the undersigned, though falsely denounced in the only newspaper in New Mexico as a slavery propagandist, was elected to the Senate by an overwhelming vote; and this, too, despite the general knowledge among the members of the Legislature that he was in favor of so arranging the slavery clause as to effect our admission into the Union, and without regard to any other circumstance whatsoever."

"He says that when the question shall come up, 'we will treat it simply as a matter of policy by which to facilitate our admission into the Union. Once admitted, we can do as we choose. We desire the friendship of all; entangling alliances with none.'

"He is exceedingly anxious to impress upon the slaveholders, that the people of New Mexico have not the slightest objection, in principle, or on the ground of a moral sentiment, to slavery; that could it live there, it would encounter no hostile feeling. In a word, he sees nothing at all objectionable in a system which brutalizes the colored man, and degrades the poor white man.

"If there are any persons in the United States who desire to colonize slaves in our Territory, I apprehend there would be no objection on the part of the people of New Mexico, let the decision of the courts be what it may. Perhaps the attempt would be beneficial; it would at all events settle the question, and effectually thwart any further attempt to make New Mexico the scape-goat to bear the burden of a question which concerns her not. We object to being made the scape-goat, and would prefer not being made use of even as an illustration."

"Should the courts in New Mexico decide that slaves may legally be held, then I am sure that no popular excitement would follow; and I am equally sure that those who embark in the colonizing experiment will speedily send or sell their slaves out of the Territory. Slave labor will not pay in New Mexico, and in that is comprised the whole question."

"What can be expected of a Territory, the first act of whose first Delegate is one of abject submission to the slave power?"

"We trust Mr. Weightman may live long enough to learn that servility to a sectional interest does not pay."

It may be that the National Era and those whom it represents may make me "feel," because of the views I conscientiously entertain; and if, in its endeavors so to make me "feel," it is as unscrupulous in its attacks on me as it has been on Governor Calhoun, I doubt not I will be shown up in a way to induce the subscribers of that paper to believe me a monster of iniquity.

There is another newspaper in the United States that has thought proper to take up the cudgels against Governor Calhoun. It is the "St. Louis Republican." This paper has the largest circulation of any paper west of the Alleghany mountains—at least I am inclined to think so—and was built up by the energy and enterprise of the editor, who is the proprietor also. As the circulation of this paper increased, so did the views of its editor enlarge, until he has at this time, I believe, taken under his sole control the whole State of Missouri, not only as regards its general policy, but he can tell you who is the best man, of all the men in the country, to be brought out as constable for any parish in the State. He has extended himself also to the State of Illinois, in the same way, and will be able to give the members from Missouri or Illinois excellent advice as to the way in which they are to conduct themselves in Congress.

He has also attended, generally and largely, to the Indian policy of the Government, and knows more now about the Indians lying between Behring's Straits and the southeast corner of Texas, than Fitzpatrick or any of those old mountaineers, intelligent and educated men who have spent forty years among the mountains; and if the Government could only be persuaded to turn over to the editor of that paper the charge of the Indian affairs, they would be placed upon a bottom as broad and substantial as the editor's, and all that old "foggyism" about Indian policy, begun by John C. Calhoun and continued by his successors, in the War and Interior Departments, would be securely shelved forever.

He is also able to give excellent advice in regard to the contiguous potato patches of New Mexico, Utah, Oregon, and California, and should the circulation of his paper be still further extended, will be found quite competent to regulate the affairs of the universe. This paper, for some reason which I will not undertake to determine, published, with apparent pleasure, anonymous articles which were abusive of the Governor of New Mexico; and while he did this, it was with a great deal of difficulty that the insertion of any publication, in the nature of a defense of that gentleman, could be obtained, although the communication might not be anonymous. I refer to a communication of my own which appeared in the paper, after a considerable contest with the editor, and which was over my own signature, and which I will read in the course of my remarks. Whether the general disposition of this editor to publish assaults on, and indisposition to publish defenses of, Governor Calhoun, is attributable to his desire to arrange the world's affairs generally, to the fact that his nether integuments too tightly fit him, or to the fact of his residence in a mercantile community, and that the merchants of New Mexico have been pleased to combine themselves against Governor Calhoun, or whether it is attributable to the myriads of "toddlies" that he has drank with certain merchants, with whom he has affiliations, in New Mexico, I will not undertake to determine. But that he is prone to attack, and indisposed to defend, is the fact. I suppose that he is the representative of the mercantile interests in New Mexico. That is one of the influences which is brought to bear against Governor Calhoun. This influence is more extended and ramified than might be supposed. The Santa Fé merchants owe five, or twenty, or fifty thousand dollars to St. Louis merchants, to Boston, New York, or Philadelphia merchants, and all of them are interested in being paid their money, and to that extent are interested in carrying out the views of the Santa Fé merchants.

There is another, a military influence in New Mexico, which has been brought to bear against this worthy Governor, of which I shall presently speak. The petition of my honorable contestant contains in itself matters and averments altogether sufficient for a defense against all the charges contained in the memorial, and, indeed, I may say against all the charges, bearing directly or indirectly on the election, that have been put before this House by the honorable gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Phelps.] This memorial sets forth that a notice of his intention to contest my election was served upon me in New Mexico, and that that notice of contest contained this charge of improper and illegal interference on the part of the Governor of New Mexico, and of his corrupt influence in the election. It acknowledges, also, the receipt of my answer, which denies that interference and corruption. Here, then, is the issue made up; and according to the law of the United States, passed by the Congress of the United States, regulating the mode of taking testimony in cases of contested elections, there was a fixed mode in which to take testimony. Now, the question is, why was not that testimony taken? Here is the reason, as set forth in the memorial:

"The following is an extract from a letter directed to your memorialist by P. J. Pillans, Esq., dated Santa Fé, December 29, 1851:

"Mr. Ashurst and myself have made two attempts to take the depositions for the contest; but it is absolutely impossible to get two justices of the peace together at one time. Why, I cannot tell; but I can very strongly guess."

When, Mr. Speaker, you turn to the law of Congress, prescribing the mode of taking testimony in cases of contested election, it will be found that those gentlemen had no right to go before two justices of the peace for the purpose of taking such testimony. They are not the officers prescribed by law. They might, therefore, as well have averred that they could not get two old women together for the purpose of taking the testimony, because of the corrupt influence of Governor Calhoun.

Then the reason why, after the issues were made up, no testimony was taken, was, that no two justices of the peace could be got together; and, at the same time, it is a fact that two justices of the peace do not constitute the proper tribunal before whom to take the testimony.

Here are the officers prescribed by section third of the act prescribing the mode of taking testimony in cases of contested election. I read from the law of Congress:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That when any such contestant or returned member shall be desirous of obtaining testimony respecting such election, it shall be lawful for him to make application to any judge of any court of the United States, or to any chancellor, judge, or justice of a court of record of any State, or to any mayor, recorder, or intendant of any town or city, which said officer shall reside within the Congressional district in which said contested election was held, who shall," &c.

The contestant in his memorial has made reference to this very law, and he knew that they ought to take the testimony according to it; and yet they did not try to take the testimony in accordance with it, because they dared not meet the issues. The officers before whom the testimony should be taken are a judge of any court of the United States, the chancellor or judge of any court of record, the mayor of any city or town. These are the officers prescribed by law.

Now, I ask any candid man if it was the bona fide intention to place a statement of testimony before this House which should be reliable and not to be misunderstood, would not any man have gone to Judge Watts or to Judge Mower, United States Judges, in preference to any New Mexican alcaldes, to take testimony in English? That is the question. But there is a very good reason why it might be advantageous to take the testimony before two Mexican alcaldes, who did not understand the idiom in which the testimony was to be taken. One of these gentlemen, who is charged with taking the testimony, is a forger—known to be a forger by the contestant—Ashurst, Merrill Ashurst, a refugee from Alabama. There is the reason at once why, instead of going before the officers prescribed by law, they come here and say that they could not take this testimony, because, forsooth, they could not get together two justices of the peace. The law did not permit them to take testimony before such officers, so long as there was one of those officers whom I have mentioned in the Territory of New Mexico.

Section tenth of this same act is as follows:

"That when no such magistrate as is, by the third section of this act, authorized to take depositions shall reside in the Congressional district from which the election is proposed to be contested, it shall be lawful for either party to make application to two justices of the peace residing within the said district, who are hereby authorized to receive such application and jointly to proceed upon it in the manner hereinbefore directed."

There is the case in which, and in which only, the testimony may be legally taken before two justices of the peace. But if justices of the peace were inserted in the third section as the proper persons to take lawful testimony, I submit it is pregnant with suspicion, that, when it is a notorious fact that Judge Watts, appointed from the State of Indiana, (an honorable gentleman whose character needs no eulogium from me,) and Judge Mower, appointed from the State of Michigan, (also of deservedly high character,) were in that Territory, they should seek to go before two alcaldes—alcaldes elected by the people of New Mexico, who, of course, having the majority, elected alcaldes from their own countrymen—who did not understand the idiom in which the testimony was to be taken. I stated, therefore, that in this memorial there was sufficient to vindicate Governor Calhoun from the charges set forth in the memorial. The issue was made up, but they did not take a particle of testimony, and they come here with suspicious reasons to account for it. I said they were afraid to take this testimony before intelligent United States officers, who would put these things understandingly before Congress.

Now, I will read my answer, and this House will get a glimmering from it, why they did not dare to meet the issue:

SANTA FE, (N. M.), September 17, 1851.

SIR: There has this day been served upon me by Mr. Jones, the United States Marshal, a document, or paper, signed "Skinner, Pillans & Ashurst," attorneys for A. W. Reynolds, which purports to be a notice that you will contest my "election as Delegate to the present Congress of the United States from the Territory of New Mexico."

Though this document is not signed by yourself, but by "Skinner, Pillans & Ashurst," with the descriptive words, "attorneys for Reynolds," I leave with my friend and attorney, E. P. West, Esq., this letter, to be delivered to you in case you recognize and confirm as yours the document alluded to.

I have taken the precaution not to reply to Messrs. Skinner, Pillans & Ashurst, before discovering that their act was by you recognized, because I was unwilling to place you—now absent in the Nabajo country, from which no advices have been received since a day anterior to the day of election—in the position of directing or authorizing them to contest, for you, my election, at any risk and at all hazards, without yourself knowing how fairly or unfairly the election might be conducted, or, indeed, without knowing what might be the result of the election itself.

The objection that the Governor's proclamation, dated the 8th of August, was not printed or distributed until the 13th, is, I respectfully suggest, one of which you can take advantage, inasmuch as the proprietors and controllers of the only press in New Mexico are your partisans. No one is better informed than yourself that, since the sale of said press (conducted by yourself) by order of the quartermaster's department, in the year 18—, the control of it has been with your friends, never having been unaffiliated, either as Editor or proprietor, by your own chief and confidential clerk, Mr. T. S. J. Johnson, late an officer of the 8th infantry, United States Army.

If, then, the failure to print, and, consequently, to distribute, is in any wise a tort, it is one of your friends, or yours, of which you can take no advantage.

I rest the validity of my election on the ground that I have, as appears by the returns, a large majority of the legal votes of the Territory.

That my majority has been much decreased by acts of organized violence of your friends, thereby intimidating the people, and driving them from the polls; this at the ranchos of Taos, and, at least, one other precinct of that county, and also in other parts of the Territory. That, in order that the popular will may be truly reflected, which is the aim and object of an election, the votes thus lost to me should be added to the majority I now have on the face of the returns. * * * * * That officers of the army have themselves voted, and sent their soldiers to vote, and in one case brought or marched them in a body to the polls, and otherwise illegally and improperly interfered with the elections. That at least one officer of the Army was in company with a number of armed men, (not soldiers,) who were engaged in acts of violence which did intimidate the people, and prevent a number of them from voting for me; this at the ranchos of Taos. That the precinct at the ranchos of Albuquerque was assailed by a body of armed men—Mexicans and Americans, partisans of yours, headed by one Candido Ortiz, supported by at least one soldier and two wagonmasters recently in the employ of the quartermaster's department, with the intent of preventing the people from exercising their right of voting at the election; and though this outrageous attempt was frustrated by the spirited resistance of the indignant people, the circumstance will furnish one link in the chain of testimony I will bring out, that there was a design on the part of your friends, military and civil, by violence to prevent the people from voting for the undersigned, and thus thwart the popular will, and bring about your election; your election which, according to the popular belief, was to bring about the recall of the troops from the frontier, and the re-instatement of the quartermaster's department, in its late strength and influence, in this Territory.

You charge illegal and improper interference of the executive in my behalf. This I deny; and charge improper interference of the military generally, and of the quartermaster's department in particular, aided and abetted by the sutlers, coin contractors, &c. et id genus omne, who draw profits from the presence of the army in the interior, and from an extravagant administration of the quartermaster's department, and have no interest in the Territory I have the honor to represent.

Your obedient servant,

R. B. WRIGHTMAN.

Captain ALEX. W. REYNOLDS,

Assistant Quartermaster, U. S. Army.

A short account of the military government which existed in New Mexico, will account for many of the circumstances which have happened; will furnish the key to many of the charges brought against Governor Calhoun; and will, in particular, account for the fact that I stand here, returned by a large majority. This history will show, that I stood up for the people to protect them against outrageous violence—outrages the most insufferable ever perpetrated anywhere. In order first to give an idea of the combinations of parties at that day, I will read from the Union, of October 8, 1850, an article prepared by myself, with no reference then, as a matter of course, to this question:

"WASHINGTON, October 7, 1850.

"To the Editor:

"SIR: I desire to correct an error into which the editor of the Union has fallen. The error is contained in the following paragraph of the editorial of October 6, entitled 'The Late Session':

"'Scarcely was the new President installed, when it became known that the commissioner of Texas, sent to organize counties in the Santa Fé country, had been foiled by the troops of the United States, and that the military commandant, acting under instruction from Mr. Crawford, had set on foot a movement for forming a State government in the Territory claimed by Texas.'

"The idea that the State movement was set on foot in New Mexico by the military commandant, or by any influence other than the will of the people, is so injurious to New Mexico, now applying for admission into the Union as a State, that I deem it to be my duty to correct it; and I doubt not the columns of the Union will be open for the correction of any and all errors into which its editor may have unwittingly fallen—and particularly should the error, as in this case, seriously involve the happiness and well-being of a large and respectable community, which is justly entitled to the esteem and sympathy of the people of the United States.

"So far from it being the fact that the State movement in New Mexico was set on foot by the military commandant, the reverse is true.

"The State movement was set on foot by sixteen civilians, citizens of the United States—some of American and some of Mexican blood—some Democrats and some Whigs—some natives of southern and some of northern States. Their address to the people appeared in the columns of the 'New Mexican,' December 8, 1849, and was replied to by a counter-address in the columns of the same paper, signed by sixty-two other civilians, among whom were included all the judges of the circuit courts, the prefectos, the sheriffs, the alcaldes, and in fact the great body of the officers of the civil government of the military commandant, all of whom held their offices at his absolute will and pleasure.

"The State movement was by them denounced as a factious movement, and the movers as the Alvarez faction. As the movement progressed, it was discovered that the military commandant had a decided leaning towards the territorial party—indeed, his acts were decidedly partisan, and against the State party.

"The State party at the late elections triumphed in every county but one, and did so despite the partisan acts of the military commandant, despite the almost unanimous opposition of the judges, prefectos, alcaldes, &c., who held their offices at the will and pleasure of the military commandant, and despite the almost unanimous vote of the employees of the quartermaster's department."

The same combination exists now. Here is the Quartermaster, and his friends are here with him. I have merely wished to show that the present opponents of Governor Calhoun are the legitimate successors of that old military party, and that it is no wonder the man who opposed it should stand here, elected triumphantly by the people, and without the necessity of the improper or corrupt interference of any one. I continue from the article in the Union:

"The civil officers, who held their offices at the will and pleasure of the military commandant, were about one hundred and fifty in number, were distributed over the whole country, and all of them, except about five or six, opposed to the State movement. They were, of course, in a state of organization for any purpose in which they thought proper to act together, and the power they could bring to bear and did bring to bear; that they were not particularly scrupulous in their action may be inferred from the following extract from the memorial of the Legislature of New Mexico to the Congress of the United States."

This was a part of the United States then. I want every one to understand where such outrages were committed in open day:

"The inhabitants of New Mexico, since February 2d, 1848, have groined under a harsh law, forced upon them in time of war, when they were thought undeserving of confidence.

"The military is independent of and superior to the civil power.

"The inhabitants have no voice or influence in making the laws by which they are governed.

"Some power other than the Congress of the United States, has made judges dependent on its will alone for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

"Some power other than the Congress of the United States has subjected us to a jurisdiction foreign to the Constitution and unacknowledged by our laws.

"We are taxed without our consent, and the taxes, when collected, are not applied to the public benefit, but embezzled by officers irresponsible to the people.

"No public officer in New Mexico is responsible to the people. Judges, unlearned in the law, decide upon life, liberty, and property. Prefectos and alcaldes impose fines, and incarcerate without the intervention of a jury.

"Alcaldes assail the right of the people freely to exercise their religion without restriction, and dictate to congregations what priest shall administer the sacraments of the Church."

"The full extent of the power to control and injure, which this unrestrained and organized band of office-holders wielded, can only be entirely understood when it is known that the military commandant held to no accountability civil officers charged with assaults upon the religion of the country, and embezzlement of the public funds.

"The influence of the quartermaster's department in the late elections was by no means an inconsiderable one.

With its army of employées, with its contracts to let, with its agencies to purchase the entire surplus of the corn and forage of the country, and with its easy means of communication by express at Government expense, it proved itself very formidable; and this influence, with some honorable exceptions, was thrown against the State party.

"This web of influence, extending to the frontiers of New Mexico, was, like the other, organized, and, like it, also, easily managed from the center; and the managers of both webs were acting in concert, and, as has already been told, against the State party."

The managers of both webs are here, Mr. Speaker, and they are Houghton and Reynolds:

"Nor is this all. In the first days of February of this year, the government printing press, the only available one in the country, was sold, and fell into the hands of the territorial party. Being owned by an army sutler and contractor, and edited by the chief judge under the military government and the chief clerk of the quartermaster, all communications of the State party were excluded from the columns of their paper. They refused to print ballots for the State party, who were obliged to write tickets (the election being held by ballot) to the number of fifteen or twenty thousand.

"With the press against the State party, the office-holders against it, and the moneyed interest of government against it, it cannot be said, Mr. Editor, that the State movement was born of or grew to manhood by executive influence; but, rather, it must be admitted that the voice of the people has made itself heard under very difficult circumstances.

"The difficult boundary question will, it is confidently expected, soon be settled by the assent of Texas; and, the boundary difficulty at rest, New Mexico stands in the same attitude as California did previous to her admission, and in the same attitude as Michigan previous to her admission, and after the adjustment of her boundary difficulties with Ohio and Indiana.

"New Mexico asks for no more than justice. She asks it of all parties and all sections. She comes here unconnected with any party or any section. Of her delegation, two are Democrats and one Whig—two southern and one northern born. She appeals to the whole United States, and claims as a right, if her constitution is republican, to be admitted to the enjoyment of all the blessings of liberty.

"With much respect, I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
R. H. WIGHTMAN.

"P. S. I omitted in my communication to refer to the correspondence, already published in the newspapers, between Governor Alvarez and Colonel Munroe, in which the latter expressed his determination to resist the operation of the State government "with all the means at his disposal," as furnishing evidence that the military commander was not favorable to the State movement or State party.

"By inserting this with my communication, you will confer a favor.

"Very respectfully,
R. H. W."

Now, Mr. Speaker, you will be surprised at the amount of pains I took to reform that military government. I have a perfect stock of charges here, made by me against it to Governor Munroe for oppressions, upon the people, to not one of which did he pay any attention. I will refer to these by their heads, intending to publish them in extenso. The first is the case of Judge Houghton—the chief judge of Colonel Munroe, the fountain of justice in New Mexico. I charged him with a variety of iniquities—of putting other people's money in his pocket, of never paying over anything he got his fingers on, and of gross official misconduct. He is one of the respectable constituents, quoad hoc, of the honorable gentleman from Missouri. [Laughter.]

Here is the document at large:

SANTA FE, (N. M.), December 1, 1849.

Influenced, sir, by duty and inclination, I lay before you charges of a most serious nature against the highest judicial officer in this Territory—Judge Joab Houghton; charges so serious, that, if true, it is an act of mere justice to the community that he should be removed from office.

In consequence of peculiar, agitating, and dangerous questions which now exist in the United States, it has been thought proper and even patriotic in Congress, to withhold from us a territorial organization, which, except for the agitating questions there existing, we would doubtless long since have obtained.

As it is, a de facto government obtains here of a most anomalous character, having no parallel in our history, opposed to the spirit and genius of our institutions and laws, and unrecognized by any competent authority.

This government de facto was established under the laws and usages of war; and upon the conclusion of the peace, February 2d, 1848, having been found in existence here, to prevent anarchy, continues by the acquiescence of the authority, whatever it may be, which is competent to change it.

Under this government, as it actually exists, the Governor exercises military, executive, and legislative functions.

To show that he has exercised legislative functions, I make reference to orders No. 10, dated February 5th, 1848, laying duties and taxes, providing for their collection and for the payment of salaries, creating offices, &c.

I presume, however, that no argument is necessary to prove that the Governor has the power under this government, as it actually exists, whether legally or not, to relieve the community of a corrupt, ignorant, or objectionable judge.

In making charges, it is necessary to be precise, and to enter into particulars; otherwise the accused will have just cause to complain that he is tried on charges which are undefined, and to which, therefore, it is not possible to make a defense.

Though by entering into unpleasant, though necessary details, I may, in the eyes of the undiscerning, appear to want good taste, I shall not refrain from so doing; preferring rather to deserve this censure, than to subject myself to the charge of concealing from the accused that which is brought against him.

In the form, then, of charges and specifications, I accuse Judge Joab Houghton, as follows:

Charge 1st. His conduct has been characterized by breaches of faith of such a nature, that the continuation of him in so elevated and responsible a station, can but have the effect of lowering in the eyes of the public the standard of American character.

Specification 1st. It has been substantiated in a court, to the satisfaction of a jury, that he has received, as the agent of Colcord & Hall, a sum of money exceeding $3,000, and not paid the same to his principals.

Specification 2d. He has received money as the agent of East & Anderson, for the specific purpose of paying duties under orders No. 10, of date February 5th, 1848, and instead of paying the money into the hands of the collector, placed therein, in lieu of money, his audited accounts for his salary as judge, which accounts were received as cash; and subsequently, when that part of orders No. 10, laying and collecting of duties was annulled, he withdrew said audited accounts from the hands of the collector, and replaced the bonds of East & Anderson, which said bonds are now in the hands of the collector, and money of East & Anderson in the hands of Judge Houghton.

Specification 3d. That on or about the 19th day of June, 1848, he was engaged in business as a merchant, being a partner in the firm of E. Leitensdorfer & Co.; that about that date, the firm of Leitensdorfer & Co. introduced into Santa Fé goods, the original cost of which, including the outfit, was not less than $100,000; that subsequently, on or about the 21st day of September, E. Leitensdorfer and Joab Houghton dissolved partnership; that on or about that date, E. Leitensdorfer left Santa Fé, appointing Joab Houghton his agent and attorney for the transaction of business; that on or about the 11th day of December, 1848, E. Leitensdorfer made an assignment of all his effects for the benefit of his creditors; that the effects assigned amounted to about $40,000, and the ascertained debts of the firm to more than $116,000; that between the dates June 19th and December 11th, E. Leitensdorfer was, for the greater or a great part of the time, absent from Santa Fé, the place of the house of business of the firm, and that the deficit is not accounted for; that nearly all, if not all, of the goods taken South for sale by the said Leitensdorfer are accounted for, while the part left in Santa Fé generally under charge of said Houghton, is the part not accounted for; and that this failure is fraudulent, and Judge Houghton guilty of the fraud.

Specification 4th. So much of the specifications under charges second and third as may be applicable to this charge.

Charge 2d. His occupying his position on the bench amounts to a denial of justice, in a large class of cases.

Specification 1st. The case of Campbell vs. Leitensdorfer & Co., involving about $8,000, was brought by attachment, based upon an affidavit of fraud, on the 26th day of May, 1849, and was in due course for trial at the June term of that year, but could not be tried, because the judge was interested; it could not be tried at the October term for the same reason, and cannot be tried for the same reasons under existing circumstances, so long as Judge Houghton occupies his present position.

Specification 2d. The case of Kelly vs. Leitensdorfer & Co., involving about $8,000, based on affidavit of fraud, was filed June 30, 1849, and was for trial in due course at the last October term, but could not be tried, and cannot be tried for the same reasons as above.

Specification 3d. The case of Webb vs. Leitensdorfer & Co., involving about $8,000, based on affidavit of fraud, was filed June 30, 1849, and was for trial in due course at the last October term, but could not be tried, and cannot be tried for the same reasons as above.

Specification 4th. There is now in the hands of the undersigned, liabilities of the firm of E. Leitensdorfer & Co., and bills against it for the gross sum of $3,659 70, to recover which six suits will be necessary; but have not filed suits, because he has not been able to discover property of that firm, the court having declared that it will adjudicate no point about which there is a contest.

Specification 5th. There is now in the hands of Mr. Biggs, by the agreement of all the parties to the suits, a large sum of money abiding their issue, and must there remain until they are decided, to the great damage of the owners thereof.

Specification 6th. There are a number of other creditors of E. Leitensdorfer & Co., who would bring suits, if they believed justice could be obtained.

Specification 7th. By the death or going away of important witnesses, the ends of justice, which are now delayed, may be entirely defeated.

Specification 8th. So much of the Specifications under charges 1st and 3d, as may be applicable to this charge.

Charge 3d. Ignorance of law, and disregard to his obligation as a judge.

Specification 1st. Before trial, out of court, he has expressed the opinion that a man about to be tried for his life was a murderer.

Specification 2d. He has admitted to bail the man whom he said was a murderer.

Specification 3d. He has written articles in the Santa Fé Republican concerning a point of law, about in due course to come before him for decision, on which depended a large class of cases involving a sum of money exceeding $80,000.

Specification 4th. Had he adjudicated on the bench as he adjudicated in the newspapers, he would have been benefited by the adjudication.

Specification 5th. At a meeting of the bar, held in the city of Santa Fé, on or about the 25th of July, 1849, at which meeting were present Messrs. Smith, Tuley, Angney, Wheaton, West, Pillans, Ashurst, Beach, Hall, and Wightman, the question was discussed as to the propriety of inviting Judge Houghton to resign; at this meeting it was the opinion of all the members present, that he was incompetent to fill the office, and eight of their number signed a letter requesting him to resign, two of them declining to sign the letter on personal grounds; the two who declined being Messrs. Smith and Hall.

Specification 6th. So much of the Specifications of Charges 1st and 2d as may be applicable to Charge 3d.

The witnesses to prove the above charges and specifications are at present in New Mexico, how long they will remain there it is impossible to say.

I have to request, therefore, as early notice as possible may be afforded me, that an investigation will be had; the commission, or whatever other body or person to whom these charges, &c., may be referred, should have power to send for persons and papers.

With much regret that I have to trouble you with so disagreeable a matter, I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. H. WIGHTMAN.

Brevet Colonel JOHN MUNROE,
Civil and Military Governor of New Mexico.

It may be proper to mention that I sent word to Colonel Munroe's Fountain of Justice that I had preferred charges of a grave character against him, and that if he would seek of Colonel Munroe, with me, an investigation, and I could not make the charges good, I would freely and cheerfully, as publicly as I had made, retract them and make amends. He did not seek an investigation, notwithstanding he very much desired my good opinion. He has applied to me for a certificate of character. He applied in these words:

SANTA FE, September 9, 1849.

SIR: In consequence of slanderous words used by you in conversation with Lieutenant Taylor, at the sutler's store, in Albuquerque, with J. L. Hubbell, Esq., at Socorro, at Santa Fé, and generally throughout the Territory, within the last few days, I demand of you an unequivocal retraction of such slanders, or the satisfaction due from one gentleman to another.
J. HOUGHTON.

R. H. WIGHTMAN, Esq.

To this anxiously-expressed desire to obtain from me a character, I courteously replied to his friend who handed me his application, from which reply I extract as follows:

SANTA FE, September 19, 1849.

SIR: I received at your hands a note from Judge Houghton, of this date, in which he is pleased to say that, in consequence of words, which he characterizes as slanderous, used by me to Lieutenant Taylor in Albuquerque, to J. L. Hubbell, Esq., in Socorro, at Santa Fé, and generally throughout the Territory, within the last few days, (I suppose was intended, a word being left out,) he demands of me an unequivocal retraction of such slanders, or the satisfaction due from one gentleman to another.

Besides the application of the word slanderous to my words, I have an objection to make to the general tenor of his note, which is this: it leaves open the inference that I made the remarks alluded to not in Judge Houghton's presence. To rebut which inference, I have to say, that three or four months ago, it became my duty, as counsel in the case of Colcord & Hall vs. Smith D. Town, to comment upon the conduct of Judge Houghton, in receiving, as the agent of Colcord & Hall, a large sum of money, in the neighborhood of $3,400, and not paying the same over to his principal, as it was intended he should, and as he was trusted to do. In my remarks to the jury, the judge was spoken of as a faithless agent, and it may perhaps not be inappropriate to mention that the jury found a verdict in accordance with the theory laid down by myself and the other gentlemen with whom I was associated on that occasion. Judge Houghton was not present on this occasion, but my remarks and the finding of the jury are matters of public notoriety.

Again, in Socorro, at which place he refers to a conversation with Mr. Hubbell, I made the same or similar remarks in a public speech to the people, Judge Houghton being present, and distant perhaps six feet from me at the time.

I deem this statement due to myself, in order to make it apparent that I have in no wise secretly assailed the character of Judge Houghton.

In conclusion, I have to say that in consideration of the fact that Mr. Houghton occupies at this time the important position of chief judge in this Territory, and is recognized as a gentleman by persons of high standing, yourself among the number, I feel myself at liberty to accept the latter of the alternatives he has been pleased to offer me. I accept his challenge, and will meet him this day at as early an hour as can conveniently be agreed upon between yourself and the gentleman who will hand you this.

Very respectfully, &c., &c.,
R. H. WIGHTMAN.

JAMES H. QUINN, Esq.

We did meet that day, and he got no certificate of character or any concession whatever. He was willing to risk his life to obtain my indorsement of him, but feared to meet an investigation. He proposed trial by wager of battle, and lost his cause, but declined meeting the more modern and less barbarous trial, (proposed by me,)—by the examination of sworn witnesses.

In reference to this memorial Colonel Munroe took no action.

Here is another document—which is a complaint that certain of the civil authorities (who are removable at the will and pleasure of Colonel Munroe) interfered with the rights of the clergy and people of New Mexico freely to exercise their religion. Here it is:

By the authority of the Vicario, Mr. Juan Felipe Ortiz, the chief ecclesiastic of the Catholic Church in this Territory, to whom has been confided the control of all ecclesiastical affairs pertaining to that Church here, I bring to your notice certain infringements on the right of that Church freely to exercise its religion.

I am authorized in saying, that the Vicario perfectly understands his responsibility to the Government under which he lives; he knows that he is amenable to the laws, as a citizen or resident, in the same manner as any other citizens or residents. The Vicario, however, should be able to enjoy the right to exercise the functions which the Church to which he has attached himself has conferred upon him, otherwise that Church is deprived of "the right freely to exercise its religion," which right is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

In speaking of the Church, I wish to be understood to mean those persons, who, entertaining similar religious sentiments, voluntarily conform themselves to a certain set of opinions, and conform themselves to certain rules. With that understanding, then, the Catholic Church in New Mexico comprehend those persons who conform themselves to the worship, and discipline, and government of that Church as it obtains here. It is the practice of all the churches to adopt rules or laws for their own government, and this necessary practice is not restrained by law. As an instance, the Episcopal Church confides the care and control of the church property to the vestries of the different congregations, and there it is, under the protection of the law, not because of any municipal law, but because it is the law of the Church. In the Catholic Church here, as well as in other parts of the United States, the property of the Church is confided to the care and control of the Bishop of the Diocese, as is also the discipline, worship, and government thereof, and by him is subdivided as may be necessary or convenient. This state of things prevails in New Mexico; the Bishop of Durango, to whose diocese New Mexico has until recently belonged, confided the particular control here to the Vicario, whom he holds responsible that that control is judiciously exercised; and the Vicario, in his turn, has subdivided it among the curates of the different parishes, whom he holds responsible.

This law, custom, or usage, be the same general or special, has been adopted by the Catholic Church, and is not forbidden by law. When it is forbidden, then will the right of that Church freely to exercise its religion have been infringed. So familiar is the fact to all in the United States, that no civil authority has a right to interfere in matters of church discipline or government, that the assertion of it must pass for a trite truism. Notwithstanding this, the following outrages have been perpetrated here in New Mexico:

The limits of parishes, as they have been arranged under the authority of the Church, have been altered by civil officers to suit their ideas of propriety or convenience. This has been done in reference to the parishes of Socorro, Albuquerque, Belen, Tome, and perhaps others; and it is believed by the authority or connivance of Judge Antonio José Otero.

Since the arrival of the American troops in this country, a Secretary of Territory and acting Governor has suspended, or attempted to suspend, Mr. Juan Felipe Ortiz from his ecclesiastical functions as Vicario; threatened to banish a priest, who suggested a doubt as to his power to do so; and finally ordered that priest to take advantage of the first opportunity to leave the country. This was done by Mr. Donisiano Vigil.

An alcalde, in the absence of the parish priest, has demanded the keys of the church of Tome from the Sacristan; opened the church; taken from it the sacred vestments and consecrated vessels, and delivered them to Nicholas Valencia, a non-conformist and suspended priest, to celebrate a marriage and mass. This was done by an alcalde of Valencia county.

An alcalde has directed Friar Benigno Cardenas, a non-conformist, suspended priest, and refugee from justice, to go to the parish of Tome, and receive, without excuse or protest from José de Jesus Baca, the regularly appointed parish priest, the delivery of the church property, taking an inventory of it. This was done by Alcalde Vicente Amijo, of Valencia county, and Friar Benigno Cardenas is now exercising his forbidden functions in the parish of Tome, from which Padre Baca is excluded.

Two suspended priests are at this moment exercising ecclesiastical functions in the county of Valencia; to this there is no objection. When any members of a church, lay or ecclesiastical, desire to apostatize, they have the right to do so, and, if they please, to be the founders of another creed. In doing this, however, they have no right to seize upon or occupy the temples of the church from which they apostatize. If they are ambitious to be reformers, they must do as the Protestants did of yore—draw off from the Catholics; build temples of their own, and leave the property of that Church where they found it, in the hands of the owners, the Catholic Church.

The suspended priests alluded to, Friar Benigno Cardenas and Priest Nicholas Valencia, are now occupying parishes or temples, from which the civil authority, without judicial decision, have ousted their predecessors. This matter stands on very simple ground. Padre Otero, at a certain date, was in possession of the temple at Belen. Padre Baca, at a certain date, was in possession of the parish of Tome, with its dependencies, and without judicial decision on either the right of property, or possession, were ousted by the civil authority, and their places filled by non-conformists, or, which is the same thing, by apostates. Now, whether the possession of Padres Baca and Otero was founded on right or not, nothing can be clearer than that they should have been permitted to retain that right until deprived of it by due course of law.

The ousting of Padres Baca and Otero, if done under color of law or authority, not having been effected by judicial decision, or legislative enactment, must have been done by executive acts. Of the executive here, you are the undoubted head; and I therefore request, as an act of justice at your hands, that the Catholic Church be restored to the possession of the property of which she has, without law, been deprived by executive acts. And inasmuch as a change of government will soon be had here, and because of the ignorance of the present judiciary, (not one of the judges having been bred to the law), to prevent future difficulties, I suggest that the courts be restrained from taking cognizance of cases involving property of the Church until a new government is legally in operation, or until the bench of New Mexico is occupied by less ignorant persons.

Should you, sir, deem it proper to make investigations concerning these matters, I caution you against the Secretary of Territory, Mr. Donisiano Vigil.

It is within my knowledge that when Colonel Washington, desirous of giving relief in one of the cases above cited, officially directed Mr. Vigil to write to Prefecto Manuel Otero to annul the order of Alcalde Vicente Amijo, and restore Padre Baca to his original position, that Mr. Vigil did dispatch such an order; and also, and without authority of Colonel Washington, an old order of his; which old order, as will be perceived by the second note of Prefecto Otero, dated October 21, is made the basis of special pleading, which has resulted in Padre Baca's being still excluded, though the express object of Colonel Washington was to reinstate him. I have also to say, that the identical reasoning contained in the second note of Prefecto Otero was used in conversation with me by Mr. Vigil.

Among the documents which I lay before you, I had intended to include the decree of December 24th of last year, referred to in one of the papers I lay before you; but have not been able to obtain from Mr. Vigil a copy, though I have made as many as four or five personal applications for it.

In conclusion I have to say, that all the material facts in the above can be substantiated by affidavits or documents.

Very respectfully,

R. H. WEIGHTMAN, Attorney.

To Brevet Colonel JOHN MUNROE,
Civil and Military Governor of New Mexico.

On this complaint, Colonel Munroe took no action.

Here are two letters of my own bringing to the notice of Colonel Munroe further outrages, together with a respectful memorial signed by one hundred owners of a church, declaring that they had been disturbed in the enjoyment thereof, and humbly requesting that he would examine into the conduct of their oppressor and remove him from office.

SABINAL, June 18, 1850.

SIR: At the request of the people of this vicinity, I have drawn up in Spanish a memorial directed to you. Of this memorial I send a copy in English.

I was sent for by express to Albuquerque by Don José Chavis, informing me that he would like me to repair to this place with all dispatch, as he feared, unless the people were pacified, violence might be committed, as the authorities were attempting to force upon the people, against their will, Padre Cardenas.

Padre Cardenas is the same person who was attempted to be forced on the people of Tome, which outrage Colonel Washington countermanded, as you will perceive by the papers I had the honor to lay before you. Upon my arrival in Los Lunas, I met persons who informed me that Judges Houghton and Otero had arrived in that place, and that for the present all was quiet. I remained in Los Lunas, and in the morning discovered that the judges, together with the prefecto, had set out on the evening before for Sabinal, a second time. I therefore hastened on. On my arrival in Belen, I was informed that the people (of Sabinal) were in a state of revolution, and that Colonel May with his company was there, &c. From Belen I galloped to this place, but found the people working in their fields, and that Colonel May had neither arrived nor been heard from. The judges had also passed below, though the Prefecto was still there, justifying the conduct of the alcalde, and threatening the people with the consequences of their insubordination. Colonel May has since been heard from, and declines interfering.

Since heading from Colonel May, the alcalde has cited, through the constable, armed men to be present, to assist him in enforcing order, for which there is no cause, as order prevails, and will prevail, unless he disturbs it. The armed men have not yet made their appearance, and I presume will not.

Of one thing I can assure you—that though determined to resist the entrance of Padre Cardenas into their church, no people who are so anxious can be more peaceable. I agree with the people entirely that the whole is an electioneering trick, to intimidate the people into voting for the existing authorities.

The people here are anxious for you yourself to examine into this matter, and not to delegate the examination to either of the judges, or the prefecto, as they believe that the whole originated with them.

Houghton, who had been at Otero's house, and Otero arrived, though not in company, on the same day, and Cardenas on the day before. On the arrival of the judges operations commenced, and rumors of assassination and revolution, in the midst of which I am living, enjoying the good things of this life with much relish, and with an abiding confidence in the virtue of the people, and none whatever in the judges and prefectos.

The Mexicans are learning rapidly their rights, and in a few more elections cannot be imposed upon by any pretended authority. Six months ago two judges, a prefecto and alcalde could have done what they pleased out of Santa Fé or Taos; but Democratic doctrines are very progressive, and much liked by every people who have had an opportunity of witnessing their operation. I have every confidence in the virtue of the people. The only thing of which I have any fear is the wholesale frauds, which experience has taught me to expect.

Be so good as to preserve this letter, as I desire to make a copy. Very respectfully yours,

R. H. WEIGHTMAN.

Colonel JOHN MUNROE,
Military and Civil Governor of New Mexico.

[Translation.]

SABINAL, June 18, 1850.

SIR: With much respect we desire to represent to your worship that for a long time past we have suffered many injuries at the hands of the alcalde, Jesus Silva, and that in the last few days, to wit, on Sunday last the 16th of this month, be, the alcalde, attempted to force on the people, against the will of a great majority of the owners of the church, the friar Cardenas, that he might perform a mass in the church.

The pretext of the alcalde for this act is, that the Cura Otero, our regular cura, has not performed mass for some time. The reason why the Cura Otero has not performed mass is that this same alcalde, some time since, put him in the public jail, and for this reason the cura fears to live here until this alcalde may be removed from office, or he can have confidence that his rights will be respected.

The owners of the church in all are one hundred and nineteen. We send a list of more than one hundred. We desire to say, that it is our desire to obey the laws, and deport ourselves as good citizens; but it is not possible to submit ourselves with patience to the tyrannical and illegal conduct of Alcalde Jesus Silva. We desire your worship to examine yourself into the conduct of the alcalde.

It is necessary for us to say, that the alcalde, before his act of Sunday last, was in company on that same day with the circuit judges, Houghton and Otero, and that afterwards the prefecto arrived here, and has condemned the people and approved the alcalde.

We desire to say very respectfully, that it will not be just for your worship to order either of the Judges, Houghton or Otero, or the prefecto to decide upon the conduct of the alcalde; for we think them equally interested with him; and we say to your worship, with all respect, that the act of Sunday last was nothing more than a project to intimidate the people, and to obtain votes in the election soon to take place.

In fine, we desire to conduct ourselves as good citizens; but we do not care to be subjected to this alcalde; and for this reason we send you this letter, to say that we have fear of his bad acts, and to petition your worship to suspend him until you can examine into his conduct.

With much respect, &c.

Signed by one hundred of the citizens of Sabinal, owners of the church.

To the Governor JOHN MUNROE.

SABINAL, June 19, 1850.

SIR: Last night I dispatched a courier from this place, with a petition, signed by more than one hundred persons, informing you of the arbitrary conduct of Jesus Silva, and praying that he might be suspended from his functions until you could examine into his conduct, and requesting that neither Judge Houghton nor Judge Otero, or Prefecto Ramon Luna, might be detailed to make the examination as they were believed to be equally culpable with the alcalde.

I have now to report to you other outrages attempted to be committed. This evening, while in company with Pedro Torres, José Amijo, and another, before the house of the first, there arrived the constable of Belen, with two other persons, with a document, (of which I send you an exact copy,) directing said constable to go to the house of José Amijo, and seek of him a list of persons who, in company with him, had embarrassed the arrangements or disposition of the alcalde. It is stated in this document that this list was understood by report, to be in possession of said Amijo. This is supposed to be the same list which was last night forwarded to you. The constable was further directed to take the bodies of José Amijo and of all the persons mentioned in the list, and bring them before the honorable Prefecto Ramon Luna, to-morrow at sunrise, there to have their offense examined into. To-morrow, I beg you to notice, is the day of the election, and the persons whose names are signed to the list, all to a man are opposed to the existing civil authorities. The capture of so many people it was doubtless supposed would have the effect of intimidating the people, between this point and Los Lunas, besides having the effect of depriving the captured of the right of voting.

This citation being illegal from beginning to end, I advised Don José Amijo, not to notice it. The people here are much frightened, and have offered to pay me to stay and defend them. Still these are the people who are represented as being in a state of revolution. They expect, and with good cause, to be harassed with fines and imprisonment by the authorities.

The people up to this time, have not committed a single illegal act; but if they are harassed still further, it is possible that through ignorance they may err. It is because of this fear that they desire me to remain with and advise them. They desire to maintain their rights, but not to break the law. If a wrong has been committed, then is the whole population, with not more than fifteen exceptions, implicated. A simple remedy for the existing evils, I take the liberty of suggesting; it is this: for you to direct the authorities here to indict, before the grand jury, all the culpable; and, in the interim, not to trouble them more concerning this matter. The investigation will then be conducted by the prosecutor of the Territory, and then if the people have offended, they will then be punished and not annoyed by petty molestations. I have to say, moreover, that it is of the utmost importance, to examine into the conduct of the alcalde. I have further to say, what I have before laid before you, that very few of the civil authorities are capable or desirous, of examining dispassionately into the conduct of others of their number; as they are, as I have had the honor of stating to you, banded together for mutual protection in their iniquities. The prefecto of the county of Bernalillo is particularly objectionable; indeed, I know of but one prefecto, whose character I am acquainted with, whom I consider competent to the task, and he is the prefecto of San Miguel, Mr. Grolman—with this gentleman I have no personal acquaintance, and his political views are opposed to mine, but he has the character of an upright, honorable, and sensible man.

As I mentioned in my communication of last night, that the cause of the difficulty here is, that the alcalde attempted to open the church that Friar Cardenas, a suspended priest, might perform therein a mass. To this step of the alcalde more than one hundred, of the hundred and twenty owners of the church, objected, signing a paper to this effect: "We do not care for Pedro Cardenas;" or, in other words they did not desire his services. Mr. José Anijio, an elderly gentleman of good repute was deputed spokesman, and, in company with a number of the congregation, told the alcalde that it was against their will for Pedro Cardenas to say mass in their church. The alcalde replied that "he had the power, and did not recognize that of the people." To which was replied: "If you do not recognize the people, or their sovereignty, the people will not recognize you as alcalde." And these words have been construed in rebellion.

With the sincere hope that the cries of a distressed people may not be unavailing, I have the honor to sign my-self your obedient servant,
R. H. WEIGHTMAN.

Colonel JOHN MUNROE,

Military and Civil Governor of New Mexico.

To these appeals of an oppressed and distressed people Colonel Munroe turned a deaf ear.

Here is the report of the Auditor of New Mexico, charging certain officers with embezzlement of the public funds. I will not read it, but it distinctly charges willful and deliberate fraud and collusion between certain officers (holding their offices at the absolute will and pleasure of Colonel Munroe) to embezzle the public funds, and exhibiting proofs of the embezzlement, on which Colonel Munroe took no action.

Here is the case of Simon Rosenstein, to which I invite particular attention. Here it is:

SANTA FE, NEW MEXICO, }
November 16, 1849. }

Sir: It is my painful duty as counsel for Simon Rosenstein, a citizen of the United States, to bring to your notice a most grievous and distressing outrage, which has been committed on his person.

Without law, or color of law, while peaceably engaged in the prosecution of his lawful business as a trader, or merchant, he was arrested by a non-commissioned officer and four soldiers belonging to the garrison at Albuquerque, and, without trial or form of trial, confined in the guard-house of that place for the night, during which he was furnished with neither food nor bedding, and without being permitted to write to his friends, though he requested permission so to do.

This arrest took place on Tuesday last of this month, at about one o'clock.

On the next morning he was told that he must be blindfolded, as it was necessary to take him to another room that he might be questioned, and having been blindfolded, he was led into another room and stripped, and bound, and scourged.

He was left insensible, and is at this moment in suffering from the effects of this illegal and brutal treatment, and knows not to this hour for what he has been punished.

Side by side with the statement of this outrage, I place the words of the Constitution of the United States: "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State or district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

Has the sufferer, Simon Rosenstein, been accused?

Has he enjoyed the right to a public and speedy trial by an impartial jury?

Has he been informed of the nature and cause of the accusation?

Has he been confronted with witnesses against him?

Has compulsory process been afforded him for obtaining witnesses in his favor?

Has he had the assistance of counsel for his defense?

Who is the perpetrator of this outrage upon the person of a citizen and upon the laws of the country; a court of inquiry may discover.

As counsel for Simon Rosenstein, I feel called upon respectfully to ask of you, sir, in your double capacity as Civil and Military Governor, to cause a strict investigation to be made into this whole matter, in order that the real perpetrators may be brought to light.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. WEIGHTMAN,

Counsel for Simon Rosenstein.

To Col. JOHN MUNROE,

Military and Civil Governor of New Mexico.

And on this complaint Colonel Munroe did take no action.

Mr. PHELPS. Who commanded at Albuquerque?

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I am talking about complaints I laid before Governor Munroe, upon which he took no action.

Mr. PHELPS. Who commanded at Albuquerque?

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. Major Hine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ORR. I have arisen for the purpose of demanding the previous question upon the motion that has been submitted, to refer this matter to the Committee on Elections and to print. Before making that motion, however, I desire to make a remark or two upon this subject. I think the debate we have been listening to has been most unfortunate, and certainly very unusual. A memorial is presented by Captain Reynolds, contesting the seat of the delegate from New Mexico, and upon that memorial the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

PHELPS] makes a speech, in which charges are brought, not against the Governor of New Mexico in connection merely with this election, but a string of general charges such as have not been brought, perhaps, against any public man since those preferred against Warren Hastings. Now, if these charges are all true, why does not the gentleman offer a resolution here, asking that a committee of investigation may be raised for the purpose of ascertaining their truth. They have nothing to do with this question in law.

Mr. PHELPS. If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] had paid a little more strict attention to what I had to say of the conduct of Governor Calhoun, he would have found that my remarks were confined exclusively to his conduct in interfering in the elections. I found it necessary to read some extracts from a newspaper, and also from a manuscript letter which had been addressed to the President of the United States by certain gentlemen in this city, and there were some other charges connected with it which it was necessary for me to read, in order to obtain the portion I wanted. I intended to confine my remarks to the interference on the part of Governor Calhoun in political affairs, and in the elections that were held in the Territory of New Mexico. I had nothing to say of the conduct of the Governor in any other particular.

Mr. ORR. I was very attentive to the remarks of my friend from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] and I heard his entire speech. I desire to inquire of gentlemen, if they do not remember distinctly that he charges the Governor of New Mexico with certain corruption in securing the election of members to the Territorial Legislature of New Mexico. I desire to inquire what connection that has with the question now before the House. But the main purpose I had in view in calling the attention of the House to this subject at the present time is this: Here a memorial is presented, contesting the seat of a delegate. That memorial should be referred to the Committee of Elections, whose duty it would be to inquire into the facts, and report them to the House in an authoritative form, and then each member of this House becomes a judge upon that statement of the facts. It is not right that either the contestant or sitting member should be prejudiced in the estimation of the House or country, by any ex parte statements made by those presenting the memorial, or in defense by the gentleman from New Mexico, [Mr. WEIGHTMAN.] It is a question which should not have been agitated at all, but should have been referred to a committee. When a committee submits a report, then it will be open to fair debate and decision by the House. I demand the previous question.

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman permit me one word of explanation. I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] has unintentionally done me injustice.

Mr. ORR. I will yield the floor temporarily to the gentleman, for the purpose of allowing him to make a short explanation. I want to make my usual motion very soon. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman was confounding some of the matter which I read at the time I was addressing the House, with remarks I myself submitted. The gentleman is inclined, perhaps, to censure the course I have pursued in the presentation of this memorial, and the remarks which I made on the day I presented it. I briefly stated the charges which the petitioner made, stating the fact that he contested the right of the gentleman from New Mexico to a seat upon this floor. I was proceeding at that time to say something in relation to the conduct of Governor Calhoun in the election in New Mexico, and my friend from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] suggested the postponement of the matter. To that point I had said nothing, but that which the rules of the House require me to say in the presentation of a memorial, or a petition. At a subsequent time, I confined myself entirely to the charges contained in the memorial. After that, at an interview with the Delegate from New Mexico, I informed him of the course of remark which I had intended to have pursued, had I not been arrested in it. I had no desire, as I stated at the time I offered that memorial, to do anything which might prejudice his case. He seemed to think that I had gone a little too far, and desired, therefore, to reply. I was willing the matter should rest there. I had confined my remark exclusively to the conduct of Governor Calhoun in interfering in the election of the Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico, and also in the special election, held in the county of Rio Arriba. I thought it was a fair and legitimate inference, and a matter which might be urged to show that there was an interference on the part of the Governor of that Territory in political affairs, which was unauthorized, and highly censurable upon his part. I did not enter into a discussion of the oppressions which the people suffered under the military Government of New Mexico. I supposed that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. WEIGHTMAN] would have confined himself entirely to defending Governor Calhoun from the charges which I brought against him. As to those, there has been no denial on the part of the gentleman. Here is the explanation I desire to make. I had intended to have submitted something further.

Mr. ORR. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] thought his action in the premises was right, but I think it has been unusual for such a course to be taken.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. Will the gentleman yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. ORR. I cannot refuse, but it is the last time.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. The gentleman from Missouri says I have not taken up the charges against Governor Calhoun. I am inclined to think that I showed those charges were before the people, brought in issue under the contested election, and that my adversaries dared not take the testimony upon those issues.

Mr. ORR. I renew my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon referring the memorial to the Committee of Elections, and that it be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for a division of the question. There is no necessity for printing.

The question then recurring first upon the reference, it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the memorial was referred to the Committee of Elections.

The question was then taken upon the printing, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. KING, of New York. I have a bill which has been before the Judiciary Committee for a long time, and which the convenience of suitors in the city of New York requires should be passed. It is one to which there can be no objection, and I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report of the bill with an amendment.

Mr. ORR objected.

Mr. KING. It is a bill to which there can be no objection. It has been in my hands for some six weeks, but the morning hour has been taken up with business connected with the public lands. I move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to introduce the bill.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KING. I hope the House will first pass this bill. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I appeal to the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his motion and allow this bill to be acted on.

Mr. ORR. I cannot do it.

Mr. SEYMOUR. The passage of this bill is absolutely necessary for the progress of business in the courts.

Mr. ORR. All the committees of this House have bills which they desire to submit, and if reports were called for regularly for one hour, they would all have an opportunity.

The question was then taken on Mr. ORR's motion, and it was decided in the negative—ayes 51, noes 52.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. KING. I believe my motion will come up the first thing on Monday next, and as it is not probable a quorum can now be brought in, I will not ask the House to act on my motion now.

Mr. STUART. Is not the Alabama land bill the first thing in order when the House proceeds to the call of committees?

The SPEAKER. There are two such bills—the Alabama land bill, and the North Carolina land bill—the previous question being demanded in both cases, but not ordered in either. Those bills, therefore, take their places on the Speaker's table, and cannot be reached until the House goes to the business on the Speaker's table: This motion to suspend the rules, if not acted on now, will be the first business in order on Monday next.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is evident there is not a quorum present, and I hope the House will therefore submit to a motion to adjourn. I make that motion.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the motion for one moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well, sir.

On motion by Mr. BRIGGS, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that Mr. BISSSELL be discharged from further service on the committee of conference upon the disagreement between the Senate and House in reference to the bounty land bill; and

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. FITCH to fill the vacancy.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of Mississippi, praying the reduction of the price of land in the Augusta and Washington land districts, and urging a grant of land for the New Orleans and Jackson railroad; which were severally referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. ROBBINS, the House then adjourned.

He also, from the same committee, to which the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution for the building of a war-steamer for harbor defense; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

He also submitted a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the California Settlers and Miners' State Convention, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to, inasmuch as a bill had been reported on the subject.

MILITARY RECONNOISSANCE.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand copies of a journal of a military reconnoissance from Santa Fe, New Mexico, to the Navajo country, made with the troops under command of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel John M. Washington, Chief of the Ninth Military Department, and Governor of New Mexico, in 1849, by James H. Simpson, A. M., First Lieutenant corps of Topographical Engineers, be printed for the use of the Senate.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.

Mr. PRATT submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to have prepared and communicated to the Senate, an estimate of the cost of constructing a basin at the terminus of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal at Rock Creek, sufficient to accommodate the trade of the canal at that point.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution to authorize the continuance of the work upon the two wings of the Capitol, with the amendment of the House of Representatives thereto, and it was Ordered, That it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

Mr. BORLAND submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings of the Senate, be instructed to make a thorough examination of the work thus far executed on the extension of the Capitol: 1st. As to the uniformity of the strata upon which the walls rest. 2d. As to the quality and the dimensions of the stone, and quality of the mortar used. 3d. As to the character of the work, the mode of its construction, and its power of resistance. 4th. As to every other matter and thing connected therewith as may, in their opinion, affect the stability and permanency of the whole structure. And the committee are hereby empowered to bring to their aid, in the foregoing examination, such of the United States Topographical Engineers, and other competent persons as they may think proper.

WILLIAM A. CHRISTIAN.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the engrossed bill for the relief of William A. Christian, the vote on the passage of which was reconsidered yesterday, on the motion of Mr. GWIN.

Mr. GWIN. I move to strike out the sum of $2,463 74 mentioned in the bill and insert $1,584 78. The committee took the bill which was originally introduced at a previous session and which passed the Senate before. They were not aware, at the time they reported this bill, that another bill had been passed into a law, covering the amount which it is now proposed to deduct. The amendment is simply to reduce the amount by taking from it that which has already been paid.

Mr. BADGER. And it ought to be mentioned, in honor of the gentleman for whose benefit the bill passed, that he himself first discovered the mistake in the amount. Being aware of the fact that a portion of the claim had been previously provided for, he gave notice of that fact to the committee, in order that the amount might be reduced to a proper sum.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT announced that the hour had arrived for the consideration of the special order, which was the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to ask that the special order be postponed for two or three minutes, for the purpose of taking up the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary providing for the purchase of the ninth volume of the laws of the United States. I make the request for this reason: Several members of the House of Representatives have applied to me, saying that they are without this volume of the laws, which it is very essential that they should have. It is in accordance with the request of the Secretary of State that he be authorized to purchase one thousand copies of this volume, to be distributed in the manner provided for by the act for the distribution of the previous volumes. I hope there will be no objection to this course.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I am obliged to object. I hope gentlemen will go on with our Iowa bill. If we can pass that in a reasonable time, then we can take up the bill of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BRADBURY. The bill which I wish to have taken up will not occupy more than two minutes. I would not ask this but for the fact that I have been pressed by members of the House, who say that it is essential that they should be furnished with this volume.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD called for the yeas and nays on his amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. Much time has been consumed by this question. At several periods the debate has seemed about to stop, and then again it has taken a new spring, while the goal has constantly receded. I know not if it is now near the end. But I hope that I shall not seem to interfere with its natural course, or unduly occupy the time of the Senate, if I venture again for one moment to take part in it.

The argument which I submitted on a former occasion has not passed unregarded. And since it can owe little to my individual position, I accept the opposition it has encountered as a tribute to its intrinsic importance. It has been assailed by different Senators on different days and in different ways. It has been met by harmless pleasantry, and by equally harmless vituperation; by figures of rhetoric and figures of arithmetic; by minute criticism and extended discussion; also, by that sure resource of a weak cause, hard words and an imputation of personal motives. I do not now propose to reply to all this array: least of all shall I retort the hard words or repel the personal imputation. On this head I content myself now with saying—and confidently, too—that, had he known me better, the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] who is usually so moderate and careful, would have hesitated long before uttering expressions which fell from him in this debate.

The position I took was regarded as natural or excusable in a Senator from one of the land States, acting under the vulgar spur of local interest; but it was pronounced unnatural and inexcusable in a Senator from Massachusetts. Now, sir, it is sufficient for me to say, in reply to this suggestion, that, while I know there are influences and biases incident to particular States or sections of the Union, I recognize no difference in the duties of Senators on this floor. Coming from different States and opposite sections, we are all Senators of the Union; and our constant duty is, without fear or favor, to introduce into the national legislation the principle of justice. In this spirit, while sustaining the bill now before the Senate, I spoke for justice to the land States.

In sustaining this bill, I but followed the example of the Senators and Representatives of Massachusetts on kindred measures from their earliest introduction down to the present time. The first instance was in 1823, on the grant to the State of Ohio of land one hundred and twenty-five feet wide, with one mile on each side, for the construction of a road from the lower rapids of the Miami river to the western boundary of the Connecticut Reserve. On the final passage of this grant in the House, the Massachusetts delegation voted as follows: Yeas—Samuel C. Allen, Henry W. Dwight, Timothy Fuller, Jeremiah Nelson, John Reed, Jonathan Russell. Nays—Benjamin Gorham. In the Senate, the bill passed without a division. In 1828 a still greater unanimity occurred on the passage of the bill to aid the State of Ohio in extending the Miami canal from Dayton to Lake Erie; and this bill is the first instance of the grant of alternate sections, as in that now before the Senate. On this the Massachusetts delegation in the House voted as follows: Yeas—Isaac C. Bates, Benjamin W. Crowninshield, John Davis, Edward Everett, John Locke, John Reed, Joseph Richardson, John Varnum. Nays—none. In the Senate, Messrs. Silsbee and Webster both voted in the affirmative. I pass over the intermediate grants which, as I am told, have been sustained by the Massachusetts delegation with substantial unanimity. The extensive grants at the last session of Congress to Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, in aid of a railroad from Chicago to Mobile, were sustained by all the Massachusetts votes in the House, except one.

Still further, in sustaining the present bill on grounds of justice to the land States, I but followed the recorded instructions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, addressed to its Senators and Representatives here on a former occasion. The subject was presented in a special message to the Legislature in 1841, by the distinguished Governor at that time, who strongly urged "a liberal policy towards the actual settler, and towards the new States, for this is justly due to both." And he added: "Such States are entitled to a more liberal share of the proceeds of the public lands than the old States, as we owe to their enterprise much of the value this property has acquired. It seems to me, therefore, that justice towards the States in which these lands lie, demands a liberal and generous policy towards them." In accordance with this recommendation, it was resolved by the Legislature, "That in the disposition of the public lands, this Commonwealth approves of making liberal provisions in favor of the new States; and that she ever has been, and still is, ready to coöperate with other portions of the Union in securing to those States such provisions." Thus a generous policy towards the land States, with liberal provisions in their favor, was considered by Massachusetts the part of justice.

It was my purpose, before this debate closed, to consider again the argument I formerly submitted, and to vindicate its accuracy in all respects, both in principle and in detail. But this has already been so amply done by others so much abler than myself—by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. GEYER,] both the Senators from Michigan, [Mr. FELCH and Mr. CASS,] the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE,] and the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. DOWNS]—all of whom, with different degrees of fullness, have urged the same grounds in favor of this bill, that I feel unwilling at this hour, and while the Senate actually waits to vote on the question, to occupy time by further dwelling upon it. Perhaps on some other occasion I may think proper to return to it.

But, while avoiding what seems superfluous discussion, I cannot forbear to ask your attention to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD.]

This amendment, when addressed to the Senators of the favored States, is of a most plausible character. It proposes to give to the original thirteen States, together with Vermont, Maine, Tennessee, and Kentucky, for purposes of education and internal improvement, portions of the public domain, at the rate of one acre to each inhabitant, according to the recent census. This is commended by the declared object—education and internal improvement. Still further, in its discrimination of the old States, it assumes a guise well calculated to tempt them to its support. It holds out the attraction of seeming, though unsubstantial, self-interest. It offers a lure, a bait to be unjust. I object to it on several grounds:

1. But I put it in the fore-front, as my first objection, its clear, indubitable, and radical injustice, written on its very face. The amendment confines its donations to the old States; and, in so doing, makes an inequitable discrimination in their favor. It tacitly assumes that by the bill in question, or in some other way, the land States have received their proper distributive portion, so as to lose all title to share with the old States in the proposed distribution. But if there be any force in the argument, so much considered in this debate, that these railroad grants actually enhance the neighboring lands of the United States, and constitute a proper mode of bringing them into the market, or if there be any force in the other argument which I have presented, drawn from the equitable claims of the land States, in comparison with the other States, to the bounty of the great untaxed proprietor, then this assumption is unfounded. There is no basis for the discrimination made by the amendment. If the Iowa land bill be proper to be passed without this amendment, as I submit it is, then this amendment, introducing a new discrimination, is improper to be added to it. Nardo I well see how any one, prepared to sustain the original bill, can sustain this amendment. The Senator from Kentucky, who leads us to expect his vote for the bill, seems to confess the injustice of his attempted addition.

2. I object to it as out of place. The amendment proposes to ingraft upon a special railroad grant to a single State a novel system of distribution of the national domain. Now, there is a place and a time for all things; and nothing seems to me more important in legislation than to keep all things in their proper place, and to treat them at their proper time. The distribution of the public lands is worthy of attention; and I am ready to meet this great question whenever it arises legitimately for our consideration; but I object to considering it merely as a rider to the Iowa land bill.

The amendment would be less objectionable if proposed as a rider to a general system of railroad grants, as for instance to a bill embracing grants to all the land States; but it is specially objectionable as a graft upon a single bill. The Senator who introduced it doubtless assumed that other bills, already introduced, would pass; but, if his amendment be founded on this assumption, it should await the action of Congress on all these bills.

3. If adopted, the amendment would endanger, if it did not occasion the defeat of, the Iowa land bill. This seems certain. Having this measure at heart, believing it founded in essential justice, I am unwilling to place it in this jeopardy.

4. It prepares the way for States of this Union to become landholders in other States, subject of course to the legislation of those States—an expedient which, though not strictly objectionable on grounds of law, or under the Constitution, is not agreeable to our national policy. It should not be promoted without strong and special reasons therefor. In the bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] bestowing lands for the benefit of the insane in different States, this objection has been partially obviated, by providing that the States in which there were no public lands should select their portion in the Territories of the United States, and not in other States. But, since in a short time these very Territories may become States, this objection is rather adjourned than entirely removed.

5. But the lands held under this amendment, though in the hands of States, will be liable to taxation, as the lands of other non-resident proprietors, and on this account will be comparatively valueless. For this reason I said that the amendment held out the attraction of seeming, though unsubstantial, self-interest. That the lands will be liable to taxation cannot be doubted. The amendment does not propose in any way to relieve them from this burden; nor am I aware that they can be relieved from it. The existing immunity is only so long as they belong to the United States. Now, there is reason to believe that, from lack of agencies and other means familiar to the United States, the lands distributed by this amendment would not find as prompt a market as those still in the hands of the Great Landholder. But howsoever this may be, it is entirely clear, from the recorded experience of the national domain, that these lands, if sold at the minimum price of the public lands, and only as rapidly as those of the United States, and if meanwhile they are subject to the same burdens as the lands of other non-residents, will, before the sales are closed, be eaten up by the taxes. The taxes will amount to more than the entire receipts from the sales of the lands; and thus the grant, while unjust to the land States, will be worthless to the old States, the pretended beneficiaries. In the Roman law an insolvent inheritance was known by an expressive phrase as damnosa hereditas. A grant under this amendment would be damnosa donatio.

For these good and sufficient reasons, I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. BELL. To test the sense of the Senate on a question suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, to come in as a proviso at the end of the first section of it, as follows:

Provided, That the lands to be selected for the States under the provisions of this section, shall not be located within the limits of any State, but shall be selected within the territories organized, or to be hereafter organized, east of the Rocky Mountains.

I do not mean to occupy the attention of the Senate on this subject. I have listened to the arguments of honorable Senators who have opposed this amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, with great attention; and it seems to me that there was more plausibility in the objection urged by the Senator from Massachusetts, (and which is obviated by this amendment of mine,) than in any of the objections which have been made. I say that it is only a plausible objection; for really, when you come to look at the subject in a legal and constitutional point of view, there can be very little difference whether States or individuals are the proprietors of lands within the States—considering that our States are not foreign to each other: for, although this is not a consolidated government, yet, in many respects, they are the same great State. The privileges of a citizen of one State are equally privileges of citizens of all the other States. There is no prohibition of free intercourse of trade or holding property between any of the States. Nevertheless, it is an objection which can be perverted, because it will tend to make the subject more understood, and will create a greater amount of prejudice against such a proposition, than any other objection which could be urged. It can raise the old cry of foreign sovereignties—States becoming proprietors, landholders, within the sovereign jurisdiction of other States. Without saying anything more, I ask that the question be taken on this amendment to the amendment, in order that these selections may be confined—if the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky should be adopted—to lands within the territories, and not within the limits of any organized State of the Union.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. RHETT. I am not going to debate this question; but, as I am the only Senator present from the State I represent, I propose to state, in a very few words, why I cannot support either the amendment or the bill. I cannot support the amendment, because it is a clear and distinct assertion of the right of the Government to aid in enabling States to carry on internal improvements. It is an appropriation, therefore, of lands, and consequently of money, to carry on works of internal improvement. This power is not granted by the Constitution to Congress, either in the appropriation of money or lands. It is contrary to the whole course I have pursued since I have been a public man.

The same objection, it appears to me, applies also to the bill itself. It is very true that in the operation of the bill it would appear that the remark of my friend from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] was correct. It does speak of alternate sections for six miles on each side of the road. That being the case, according to his argument, and according to the argument of Mr. Calhoun, it would be no loss to the Government, inasmuch as every other alternate section is appreciated and doubled in price to the Government by the bill. If this appreciation of alternate sections takes place, I admit that the principle stated by Mr. Calhoun covers the bill. But this bill does not stop there; and I think the real practical part of the bill does not begin there. The real operation of the bill is in the ulterior part, providing that beyond the six miles lands may be located for fifteen miles further; and within these fifteen miles, they are not to take lands by alternate sections, and there is to be no appreciation of sections, but they may take them in one body aggregately.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. They are to take lands fifteen miles in all, and not fifteen miles beyond the six miles.

Mr. RHETT. Well, then, nine miles beyond the six miles they are to take lands, and they are not then to take them alternately, but may take them aggregately. Undoubtedly they will select all the best portions of the lands in aggregate masses. Pursuing their own interests, they would be acting foolishly if they did not do so. What, then, becomes of the alternate-section principle, by which the improvement of a part is made to inure to the benefit of the whole? They will take the better portions, and leave the refuse lands, that we have no right to suppose will realize any advantage to the Government. This portion of the bill seems to me to go entirely beyond the original bills passed by the Senate formerly, when Mr. Calhoun was a member of this body. Then, the lands that were granted were entirely waste and wild lands. But these railroads, I understand, will go through lands in the West, where there are not any alternate sections which are not taken, but where the greater portion of the land on each side of the road has been taken. This very provision, allowing the land to be taken in large masses beyond the six miles, places it pretty much on the same footing with the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. Therefore the objection that applies to the amendment, applies also, in my judgment, to the original bill. They are both of them in this form, as I have said, bills appropriating lands as a substitute for money by this Government for internal improvements in the States. I have been, and I believe ever will be, unalterably opposed to an appropriation for internal improvements in the States, either of money from the public Treasury, or of lands from the public domain.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. RHETT] is in error as to the construction of this bill. I understand this to have been, in the respect to which he refers, a copy of the bill which passed at the last Congress for the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Illinois. The construction which has been given to that bill, not only by its friends upon this floor and in the other House of Congress, but by the Departments in its execution, has been that the lands, not only within the six miles, but also outside of the six miles, and within the fifteen miles, were to be selected in alternate sections. That question has been before the Departments, under that law, within the last few weeks, and was so decided with reference to the selection of lands by the three States to which I have referred.

Mr. WALKER. That is the fair construction. Mr. DOUGLAS. It having therefore received that construction, which is in my opinion the correct construction according to the intent and meaning of the friends of the measure here and in the other House at the time it passed, of course this bill will receive the same construction when it shall become the law of the land and the Departments shall be called upon to execute it. And receiving that construction, these lands will be selected in alternate sections to the extent that they go on each side of the road, even up to the limit of fifteen miles. That I apprehend obviates the objection which has been urged by the Senator from South Carolina. In regard to his remark with reference to the policy of Mr. Calhoun, I can only say that the speech of that distinguished Senator from South Carolina, now no more, was made in support of the Illinois bill, of which this is a copy. Therefore, I regard the speech of Mr. Calhoun as having indorsed not only the principles but the details of the bill now pending before the Senate. I remember well the language of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina at that time. When it was urged that the Illinois grant was too much, that the road was too long, that it required too large a quantity of land, his reply was, that the principle being right, the policy being correct, the longer the road the greater would be the advantage which would result to the United States from it. It was with reference to this policy that that speech was made. Of course it is fresh in my mind, because being here at the time and feeling an interest in the bill on which he was speaking, it made a deep and abiding impression on me. I thought that he was correct then; and if correct then, I think the policy is right now when applied to a different road from that on which he spoke, the principles and the details of the bill being the same, so far as they occur to me at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not recollect that, in the former discussions on this subject, the attention of the Senate was ever brought minutely to the selection of the lands beyond the six miles provided for in these several bills. I do not recollect that the attention of the Senate has ever been, until this session, brought to the consideration of the selection of the lands on the outside of the six miles in reference to the price. That is what I want to have understood. I do not intend now to discuss anything, for I am as much tired of the subject as any gentleman can be, and I am tired even of hearing myself talk. I have talked enough on the subject; but I want to make my statement, and then, after making a motion, I will take my seat.

I wish to state that I do not recollect that Mr. Calhoun, or any other Senator, in discussions which have taken place in former Congresses upon this subject, ever called the attention of the body to the question of the increased price outside of the six miles next the line of the road. Sir, it is a fact that there is no increase provided for by these bills upon any land beyond the six miles. The increase of price is limited to the lands within the six miles; and if there be no land within that distance from which to make the selection, the effect of the bills is a donation, a complete donation, of so much land outside of the six miles, which the States get without any equivalent at all. I have voted for these bills heretofore upon the principle of internal improvements, for all that—knowing it, feeling it, and willing to go it. But I want things understood. I want the Senate and the country to know, when we vote for these bills, that that is the effect of them—that the lands on the outside of the six miles are given as so much clear gain to the States, and that there is no increase at all upon the price of those lands, but that they are an entire loss to the Government of the United States—so much donated away.

Having adopted the proviso of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] to make my amendment consistent, we ought to strike out "New Mexico" in another portion of it; and I therefore move that, as an amendment to my amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RHETT. Mr. President, when I noticed what Mr. Calhoun said in the argument which was referred to by my friend from Iowa, I did not wish the Senate to understand that I intended to support what Mr. Calhoun supported, or repudiate what he repudiated. But as he had been quoted, and as he is some authority in South Carolina, I thought proper to show, if I understood the bill, that Mr. Calhoun was not correctly reported; and now, if I understand the bill correctly, I do not stand corrected by the Senator from Illinois. What was the principle upon which Mr. Calhoun advocated these bills? Why, it was the alternate, section principle, that you are to give one section and then add a double price to the next section; that this Government, by selling the next section at the double price, lost no money; that it was not a donation for internal improvements to the States; that it was nothing more than an equitable and convenient arrangement by which the United States, as a landholder, so arranged its own property, as that it lost nothing, although the States gained by the operation. That was the proposition and principle of Mr. Calhoun. Is that the principle of this bill? Why, sir, the Senator from Kentucky has just stated, that this principle operates here only within the six miles, and not beyond that limit. Beyond that limit—and for the nine miles beyond, there is no such provision whatsoever, so far as Mr. Calhoun's principle is concerned. It is true, I thought, there was an additional principle upon the face of the bill itself—and that beyond the six miles limitation, the lands could be located in the aggregate and not in alternate sections.

I will not insist upon my construction of the bill, if Senators say that the Departments give it another construction; but it is certainly capable of the construction I contended for. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] alleged in his speech, that the meaning I ascribed to it was its meaning, and I certainly have not heard that assertion contradicted in any argument on this floor. The bill is certainly not in conformity, in any view, to the principle which Mr. Calhoun laid down, which was that as a landholder we did not give away the land; that it was in reality giving nothing, because by giving one section we realize as much by obtaining double the price from the alternate section, and the Government lost nothing by the operation; and that it was an arrangement which, as a landholder, the Government had a right to make, without being involved in the question of internal improvements. In this way he steered clear entirely of the constitutional objection. But he could never have asserted this principle, if his attention had been brought to a measure like the bill before us. Suppose it had been proposed that Illinois or any other State should go and take every alternate section, and that the sections reserved should not sell for any other price than that stipulated for in the general laws of the country—that the alternate sections should not sell for the double price; would Mr. Calhoun have voted for a bill of that kind? No proof that he would have done so has been presented to the Senate; and it cannot be shown from his observations that he supported any principle which would justify such an appropriation of the public lands.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to say to the Senate that I do not expect to vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky; not that it does not meet my approbation, on the contrary, I am in favor of it. I might have avoided the vote, but I do not desire to avoid any vote, and hence I wish to state the reason why I shall not vote at all upon the amendment. The Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. SEBASTIAN]—his family being in a condition requiring his presence—came to me, and asked me to pair off with him. As a matter of courtesy and kindness I agreed to do so. He was opposed to the amendment; I am in favor of it. It is for this reason that I shall not vote upon it.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to make a similar explanation. At the request of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson,] who has participated in this debate, and who has been called home to his family, and with a view to his personal accommodation, I have paired off with him. I should, otherwise, have voted against the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, on the amendment offered by Mr. UNDERWOOD, as amended, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Fish, Foot, Hamlin, James, Mangum, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Underwood, and Upham—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Aitchison, Bayard, Borland, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Geyer, Gwin, Jones of Iowa, King, McClae, Mason, Morton, Rhett, Rusk, Shields, Soule, Stockton, Wade, and Walker—26.

So it was rejected.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended. The amendment made was the substitute of the Committee on Public Lands for the original bill.

Mr. SEWARD: I have an amendment which I wish to offer to the bill. I move to strike out from the first section the words "of railroads from the city of Dubuque to Keokuck, and from Davenport, on the Mississippi river, in said State, as may be designated by the authority of said State," and insert "of a railroad from Davenport, on the Mississippi river, as may be designated by the authority of the said State, through Fort Des Moines to such point as the said authority shall select on the Missouri river, with branches from Fort Des Moines to Burlington and Dubuque."

The part of the section proposed to be amended would then read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby granted to the State of Iowa, for the construction of a railroad from Davenport, on the Mississippi river, as may be designated by the authority of the said State, through Fort Des Moines, to such point as the said authority shall select on the Missouri river, with branches from Fort Des Moines to Burlington and Dubuque, and to such point as the said authority shall select on the Missouri river; which authority shall also fix and determine the routes of each of said railroads.

I shall detain the Senate but a moment upon this amendment. It requires some explanation. This bill, as I understand it, proposes to aid the construction of two railroads in the State of Iowa; one from Davenport, on the Mississippi river, to some point in the Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river; and another railroad from Dubuque, on the Mississippi river, to Keokuck, on the Mississippi river—that is, one railroad running east and west through the State of Iowa, and one railroad running north and south, between two points on the Mississippi river, both in that State.

In order to express my purpose, I propose to take out part of the bill and insert a substitute; and I propose to leave the chief railroad, running through the State, precisely as it is in the bill—that is, from Davenport, on the Mississippi river, to Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river. Then, in lieu of the railroad connecting the two points, Dubuque and Keokuck, on the Mississippi river, I propose that roads shall be constructed which shall run east and west through the State; and to accomplish that object, to make a branch railroad from Fort Des Moines, upon Des Moines river, which is in the center of the State, and is a point through which the principal eastern and western railroad will pass, to Dubuque, on the Mississippi river, and another branch from Fort Des Moines to Burlington, on the Mississippi river.

Thus, while my amendment contemplates leaving the central railroad just as it is in the bill, it proposes, in lieu of the railroad between Dubuque and Keokuck, crossing the State from north to south to make branches from the Des Moines river to the two points, Dubuque and Burlington. The reason which has controlled my mind, grounded upon such information as I have with regard to the State, is, that the communications to the markets from that State will necessarily be to the east and the south. The northern branch which I propose, to Dubuque, will give the people living in the region of the State through which it will pass, an eastern communication by railroad, connecting with the eastern railroad at Dubuque, and so with other lines of railroad to the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia—that is, with the Atlantic coast. The same effect will be produced by branches running from that same point to Burlington, which will there connect this country with the railroads in the process of construction, and so give to Burlington, as well as to Dubuque, access, by communications through the State of Illinois, to Eastern markets, while at the same time they will have, through the southern branch at Burlington, a communication with the Mississippi river, and so with the Southern ports.

Now, sir, I am not able to say that this is a more judicious location of these internal improvements; I can only say that I am so informed, and I think it looks reasonable. It will be seen that the railroad which the bill contemplates between Dubuque and Keokuck, runs not quite parallel, indeed, with the Mississippi river, yet it is practically so, and thus giving a railroad communication down the Mississippi, though not materially shorter than by river, and perhaps it is even as long as the part of the Mississippi river between the two points, although the Mississippi is navigable between the two points to be connected by this proposed railroad. The Government of the United States have already made appropriations for the improvement of the Des Moines river, and the effect of granting these lands now, to make a railroad communication between the two points on the Mississippi, seems to come in conflict with the policy of the Government in improving the navigation of the Des Moines river. It is for these reasons, which I have stated as tersely as I could, that I have preferred the system contained in the amendment which I have proposed. I need not say that I make this suggestion not without self-distrust, and with very great deference to the Senators of the State which is so much interested in this bill.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from New York the propriety of proposing his amendment to the amendment of the committee, which is in the same words as those used in the original bill. His amendment will then come in the third line of the sixth section. The amendment reported by the committee has been agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and it is now before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. SEWARD. I have no objection that it should be introduced in the section named by the Chair.

Mr. ATCHISON. Before I vote upon this proposition, I would be glad if one of the Senators from Iowa would explain the effect of this proposition. Sir, if the principles of this bill are settled here, I think the details may safely be left to the State of Iowa; in other words, I think it may safely be left to that State to say where shall be the location of the road. I think that this amendment will materially change the object of the bill; and without the assent of the Senators from Iowa to it, I shall vote against it, and against any similar proposition to amend.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I trust that the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Senator from New York. This is a question which ought to be left to the State of Iowa to decide upon. That State has now, for three different sessions, memorialized Congress to grant the land proposed by the bill for making a railroad from Dubuque to Keokuck, and from Davenport to Council Bluffs. It will be entirely competent for the Legislature of the State, and the companies which may be organized, to make the line of road as proposed by the Senator from New York, if they should deem it advisable; but they desire to have surveys made with reference to the best locality on which to place these roads, and I think it ought to be left to the State, and not to Congress, to designate the routes or the points to be adopted. I hope that the amendment will be rejected, and that the bill will be passed exactly as it is now before the Senate.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I do not know that I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. It was read, but in the connection in which it was read, I confess I did not understand it. It is a most unexpected amendment by the friends of this bill. We were not advised that the Senator from New York, or any other Senator, designed to offer such an amendment, and we were not consulted in relation to it. If I understand it, it proposes to leave the roads as they now are in the bill, with an additional branch from Fort Des Moines to Burlington.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, I will state that the amendment proposes to leave the main or central road as it is—that is, from Davenport to Council Bluffs, and to strike out the road from Dubuque to Keokuck, and to make branches from Fort Des Moines to Burlington and Dubuque.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think I can explain in one instant the change which this proposed amendment makes, so that Senators will understand it. The amendment of the Senator from New York, as I understood from him a moment since, leaves the main road as it is proposed in the bill—that is, the road from Davenport to Council Bluffs, by the way of the Raccoon river, and in lieu of the road from Dubuque to Keokuck, it provides for two branches, which two branches shall constitute the other road, with this change only: It makes the two branches constitute one road from Dubuque via Fort Des Moines to Burlington, instead of Keokuck. It will be as the other bill was, with the exception that it makes Fort Des Moines a point in the road between Dubuque and the lower extremity of the road, and then changes the terminus from Keokuck to Burlington. Otherwise the bill will be as it was.

Mr. ATCHISON. That is a very material alteration.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is so; and it is a change which I think should not be adopted. That matter should be left to the people of the State of Iowa to settle for themselves.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. In answer to an inquiry made on my right as to the situation of Burlington, I will state that it is about forty miles north of Keokuck, and between those two points intervene the Rapids of the Des Moines river. One great object of the railroad is to get below the Des Moines river rapids, which are a great obstruction to the navigation of the Mississippi river. Fort Des Moines is not named in the bill, and I hope it will not be named. I trust Iowa will be allowed to designate the towns and routes for itself. I was going to remark that if the bill were left as it now stands, with an additional provision for a grant of land for a road from Fort Des Moines to Burlington, I certainly should not object to it. I would most willingly consent to a proposition of that sort, and the more so, because our Legislature, at its last session—though we were not advised of the fact till long after this bill was reported—memorialized Congress for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a road from Burlington to Fort Des Moines. I have a calculation of the quantity of land which would be granted, if this amendment were adopted, and I find it would only amount to an additional appropriation of some 200,000 acres.

Mr. HALE. Oh! is that all?

Mr. DODGE. If the bill were allowed to stand, and the branch from Fort Des Moines to Burlington were to be created, the bill would even then appropriate less than it was supposed to grant when it was first reported. We then believed that, under its provisions, there would be granted to our State some 1,800,000 acres. But we find, by calculation, that it does not now appropriate quite 1,500,000 acres. If the Senator from New York will shape his amendment so as to give us a branch road from Burlington to Fort Des Moines, leaving the rest of the bill as it now stands, I shall not object, because we propose to get an appropriation for that road, if it is not passed now. The design of our Legislature was to get roads running from east to west, and from north to south through our State. Objections may be made to the courses and particular termini of these roads. But our State is a Union State; we wish it to be fastened with bands of iron, both to the free States on the east, and to the slave States on the South; and we like one as well as we like the other. We wish to have our roads made as the Legislature and the people of our State have proposed to have them. But if there is any desire on the part of the Senate to give us more than is embraced in the bill, we are not too modest, at least I am not, to accept it most thankfully.

Mr. CASS. I merely wish to remark that all these propositions have been before the Committee on Public Lands. That is the tribunal which, in the first instance, examines them; and they examine them more thoroughly than any Senator can do in his individual capacity. This bill has been examined by that committee, and, indeed, reported by them; and it is safest, in my opinion, to take it as it is. If there is any other proposition differing from this, that proposition ought, in my opinion, to go before the Committee on Public Lands, and be reported upon by them. We want to know the facts; and the committee investigate the facts, and report accordingly. If there is to be another proposition, let it be a separate one, and let it be sent to the committee, that they may examine it, and report upon it.

Mr. SEWARD. I ought to say that this amendment is offered in no spirit of opposition to the bill. I shall vote for the bill, whatever disposition the Senate may make of the amendment I have proposed. I am not going to insist, either, that the Committee on Public Lands have not exercised a sound discretion on this subject. I barely say this: that there is a right remaining to every member of the Senate to pass his opinion on the judgment of every committee of the Senate; and that, looking at the map, with such information as I have in regard to the State of Iowa, it seems to me that the public interest generally, as well as the interest of the State itself, would be more promoted by such a plan as that which I have proposed than by the other. With regard to the Union, sir, I think the argument is decidedly in favor of my proposition, because it connects a larger portion of the States, East and West, and North and South. One of these branch railroads connects with the East, and the other with the South; while the two branches connect the whole State with the South, and they start from the center of the State.

Mr. HALE. I think, Mr. President, that the honorable Senator from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE] suggested that if some modification of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York could be made by which the State of Iowa would consent to receive three hundred thousand acres more than is proposed to be given by this bill, he would be in favor of it. [Laughter.] If it could be done, sir, I should be in favor of it too, because we would thus get rid of three hundred thousand more acres of the public land by such an amendment, and would thereby effect a great saving in the time of Congress.

As to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS], that this proposition ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands, it seems to me that we have got beyond that stage of the business. We know well enough what that committee will do. They will give just as much as is asked for; and I for one feel under deep obligation to the Senator from Iowa for so modestly consenting to take three hundred thousand acres over and above the fifteen hundred thousand proposed to be given by this bill, without rendering it necessary to go through the formality of applying to a committee. [Laughter.]

With respect to the remarks made by that Senator, in regard to the stability of the Union, I had thought from the speech of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND], delivered here yesterday, that agitation in regard to the durability of the Union was to be henceforth concentrated in the question of the durability of the foundations of the Capitol.

These legitimate issues, which have been before the country so long, are, it seems, according to the Senator from Arkansas, now disposed of; and henceforth the policy of the country is to be decided and discussed on the question of the foundation of the Capitol. I make this suggestion because I think that if this amendment is now modified in the way proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DODGE]—some gentleman may think I am joking, but I tell them I never was more sober in my life—I should be glad, as a matter of economy of the public time—not of the public lands, sir, for we have got beyond that—I say I should be glad if this amendment could be modified in the manner suggested by the Senator from Iowa, in such a way that they would take three hundred thousand more acres without troubling the Senate and occupying its attention some eight or ten weeks with another bill. And, sir, if this bill could be laid aside for five minutes, to put it into that shape, I would certainly vote for it.

Now, sir, I want to say one word in explanation of my not voting for the bill when it was called up. I was not in my seat when the question was taken on calling it up. I was in the gallery, and I observed that several gentlemen explained that they had paired off with Senators. I was applied to by a Senator, not now present, to know whether I would pair off with him. I refer to the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT], who is absent, and who is friendly to the bill, he supposing that I was opposed to it. When he made this application, I told him that I was not sure that I was in that category; that I did not know how I should vote. And I have been in a somewhat doubtful state. I have not been here to be enlightened by the speeches which have been made; and, therefore, it is not to be wondered at if I entertain some doubts. But, sir, as it happened that the Senator from Indiana was kind enough to pair off with me on a question on which I did feel some interest, and as he and his colleague are both absent, I thought it would be quite fair, considering the doubtful state of my mind, to pair off with both of the Senators from Indiana. [Laughter.] That is the reason why I did not vote for calling up the bill. I have no opposition to it, but I hope the amendment will be carried.

Mr. BORLAND. A single word in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, as to his allusion to the wings of the Capitol. I think his mind may be quieted now, and that the Senate and the country may be to some extent quieted, when I inform him that I disposed of the "free-soil" in that wall the other day by removing it with the toe of my boot; and we learn upon pretty good authority that the people of New Hampshire are about to dispose of their Free-Soil representative here in a way almost as summary.

But I rise, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, to say, such an amendment as that proposed by the Senator from New York, if referred to the committee, could not be reported upon favorably for this very reason: When this Iowa bill, and the others like it, were before the committee, the first question we considered was, whether the principle they involved was a sound one; and then, whether it was good policy to act upon it. Having decided this in the affirmative, we next determined the number of roads each State should have. And this settled, we, for reasons of obvious propriety, and without hesitation, left the routes of the road and the selection of their termini to the Senators from the States respectively. That seemed to me at the time to be a proper course on the part of the committee. And I find no reason to think otherwise now. No Senator living at a distance from the roads, as the Senator from New York does from those in Iowa, can possibly determine this matter so well or so properly as the Senators. This is a grant to the State of Iowa for public works within her own borders. It is for her to determine where and how she will dispose of it. Her decision, as the one most enlightened and most reliable, necessarily must be conclusive with us. So, also, we know and hear her here only through her own and most competent and faithful Senators. To us, their voice, their decision, their judgment, is hers. In my opinion, therefore, every consideration of propriety requires the rejection of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.]

Mr. HALE. I have not a word to say about the taste of the Senator from Arkansas in his personal allusion to the Senator from New Hampshire; but I would remark that it has been the misfortune of myself, and of those with whom I have acted, that when those who would assail us failed in argument and intellect, they have used their boots, and when they succeed their success may be because they have more boots than arguments. With regard to the fact stated by the Senator from Arkansas, that when he had kicked out the mortar from the wall the pointers went right to work and replaced the mortar and repaired the wall, I will tell him that is the way we do. When an assault is made upon us, we put the pointers to work immediately; and I think the Senator will find before long that those who have been met with such arguments as he has suggested, are increasing very fast. I know that there are more boots on the side of those that kick at free-soil than there on the other side. I yield that point, sir; but when you go up from boots to head I think we have a pretty fair chance, but the boots we give up entirely. [Laughter.]

Now, in regard to the allusion to the victory that has been achieved, I am perfectly willing that the victors should crow and enjoy the spoils of the conquest; but I can tell the Senator, from experience, that he will find it will be better to take defeat in homeopathic doses. It may come by and by too thick and too overpowering for those who have been accustomed to meet argument with boots. And, besides, they may receive it with a better grace if they have been disciplined in the school in which they take it in homeopathic doses. Sir, I am accustomed to defeat. I was defeated in the House of Representatives some few years ago, and it was a sort of boot game then; but I yielded with such grace as I could, and abided my time. I expected to be defeated again; I expected that the Senate would be deprived of my services, as it has been of the services of the Senator from Mississippi also, [Mr. Foote.] When that Senator was here he did intimate—though I have no doubt it was in an unguarded moment, and contrary to his usual kindness of heart—that if I should be found in the State of Mississippi, it might become necessary for him to administer a severe infliction upon me. He is now in the State of Mississippi as its Executive head, and though he has not been the death of me in Mississippi, he has in New Hampshire, because as he happened to be out of the Senate, the people there thought there was no need of my services here any further. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. I am sorry that the Senator from New Hampshire should have taken anything I said as either serious or unkind. I assure him that what I said was intended for pleasantry—said in playful reply to the hit he made at me about the wings of the Capitol, &c. I could not mean any unkindness in my remark or allusions; for, as he well knows, that however much I may differ with him in his political views—however much I may object to his public course, I entertain for him, personally, the kindest feelings. He now alludes to what I said about the mortar in the walls of the Capitol yesterday. In the same spirit of kindness, I will tell him that I apprehend there is, indeed, some resemblance between the process alluded to and the proceedings of the Free-Soilers whom he represents. The mortar was shown to be unsound. What did the architect do? He did not rid the bosom of the work of "that perilous stuff;" but proceeded to cover it up—to hide from public view—to plaster it over by applying a little sound mortar to the surface. And so, sir, I think it not unlikely that, when Free-Soilers find themselves defeated—the people having weighed them and found them wanting—will change their colors for the time, and seek to regain their position with a new face, made up of a little of this new mortar on the surface.

The PRESIDENT. This discussion is entirely out of order.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no more to say, sir. The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SEWARD; and it was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I stated some time ago, that I thought the first section of the bill could be amended in a manner to improve the character of the bill very much. I allude to an amendment that I intend to propose, beginning in the eleventh line at the word "provided," and striking out all down to the word "surveyed," in the thirteenth line, and insert what I send to the Chair.

The amendment proposed to strike out the following words: "Provided, That the right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet on each side of the line of said roads, and a copy of the survey," and to insert the words:

Provided, That in locating the railroads aforesaid, and assigning the limits to the easement, no more land shall be taken from the United States than is necessary for a convenient construction and use of said roads or public ways for transportation, including stations, with the usual buildings of all kinds, turn-outs, and such other appurtenances as are usually enjoyed by railroad companies, and a copy of the location.

So that the proviso, thus amended, will read as follows:

Provided, That in locating the railroads aforesaid, and assigning the limits to the easement, no more land shall be taken from the United States than is necessary for a convenient construction and use of said roads or public ways for transportation, including stations, with the usual buildings of all kinds, turn-outs, and such other appurtenances as are usually enjoyed by railroad companies; and a copy of the location of said roads, made under the direction of the Legislature, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices respectively, and to the General Land Office at Washington City, within ninety days after the completion of the same.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope that the amendment will be adopted. It is a practical amendment and embraces a matter which we overlooked in the details. I trust it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. In order to carry out the purpose of that proviso, another amendment in the seventeenth line is necessary. It provides that a copy of the survey of said roads, made under the direction of the Legislature, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices respectively, and to the General Land Office at Washington city, written ninety days after the completion of the same. The amendment which I propose is to add the words "to be recorded" to the end of the section.

The PRESIDENT. The clause of the proviso thus proposed to be amended will then read:

"And a copy of the survey of said roads, made under the direction of the Legislature, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices respectively and to the General Land Office at Washington city, within ninety days after the completion of the same, and to be recorded."

Mr. DAVIS. I should like the proviso still better—but gentlemen can do as they please about it—if the location were recorded in the register of the counties where the land lies. It would be a great convenience to the public if this were so. But I do not propose to amend in that way, and I simply propose that their returns to the land office shall be recorded.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEYER. I have an amendment which I propose to offer, to come in at the end of the third section of the amendment reported by the committee. It is to add the following:

Which lands shall, from time to time, be offered at public sale to the highest bidder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall not be subject to entry until they shall have been so offered at public sale.

So that the section will read—

"That the sections and parts of sections of land which, by such grant, shall remain to the United States within six miles on each side of each of said roads shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of the public lands when sold, which lands shall, from time to time, be offered at public sale to the highest bidder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall not be subject to entry until they shall have been so offered at public sale."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That appears to be a very important amendment. I hope we shall have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are several gentlemen here who say they do not understand that amendment. I want to know if I understand it. If I do understand it, it is to the effect that the lands surveyed at the price of $2 50 per acre for the Government, are required to be advertised and sold at auction. Is that the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. GEYER. It is, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I hope it will be adopted, and let everybody have a fair chance, when these lands come into market.

Mr. GEYER. The object is not to change the minimum price, but to prevent the absorption of these lands by entry, and to give to the United States the advance, if any, in price of the lands, when they shall be sold.

The question was then taken, by the yeas and nays, on the adoption of the amendment, and resulted—yeas 34, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Clarke, Clemens, Cooper, Davis, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mangum, Mason, Morton, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Smith, Soule, Stockton, Underwood, Upham, Wade, and Walker—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Gwin, and McKee—6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I stated yesterday, somewhat in detail, the reasons why I could not vote for these railroad bills, and why I preferred the policy of graduating the price at which the public lands should be sold. I think these railroad bills, relating to internal improvements in the States, are local and partial in their character; and that Congress cannot properly decide whether a railroad should run east or west, or north or south. It is said that the object of these railroads is to increase the sale and settlement of these lands, and that is the proper policy for the country to pursue. I think that a graduating policy is better, and therefore I propose a substitute, if it be in order, and if it will not embarrass the Senate in their votes, for the present bill, in order to provide for the graduation of the price of the public lands.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

That from and after the first day of January next, all the public lands of the United States, then subject to private entry, shall be arranged into six classes, in the manner following, namely: Lands which have been in market, subject to private entry, ten years or less, shall constitute the first class; those which have been in market, subject as aforesaid, more than ten years and not exceeding fifteen years, shall constitute the second class; those which have been in market, subject as aforesaid, more than fifteen years and not exceeding twenty years, shall constitute the third class; those which have been in market, subject as aforesaid, more than twenty years, and not exceeding twenty-five years, shall constitute the fourth class; those which have been in market more than twenty-five years, and not exceeding thirty years, shall constitute the fifth class; and those which have been in market more than thirty years, shall constitute the sixth class; the classification to be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Provided, That in fixing these classes, the fraction of the year between the date of offering and the commencement of the next calendar year thereafter, shall not be computed: And provided further, That whenever lands subject to entry at private sale are withdrawn from market for any cause, the time they may be thus kept out of market, if it exceed one calendar year, shall be excluded from computation in fixing the several classes.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the minimum price of the lands, in the first class, shall be one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; of those of the second class, one dollar per acre; of those in the third class, eighty cents per acre; of those in the fourth class, sixty cents per acre; of those in the fifth class, forty cents per acre; of those in the sixth class, twenty cents per acre.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all the public lands of the United States, which now are, or may hereafter be, brought into market, and become subject to private entry, shall be subject, as the periods indicated by this act shall arrive, to the scale of graduation herein provided, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and be open to entry and purchase agreeably thereto.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That upon every reduction in the prices of said lands which shall take place by the graduating process of this act, the occupants or settlers upon any of the said lands shall have the right of preemption at such graduated or reduced prices, which right shall extend to a period of six months from and after the dates at which the respective graduations shall take place; and any land not entered by the respective occupants or settlers within that period, shall be liable to be entered or purchased by any other person until the next graduation or reduction in price shall take place, when it shall, if not previously purchased, be again subject to the right of preemption for six months and so on from time to time as said reduction shall take place: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to interfere with any right which has accrued, or may accrue, by virtue of any act granting pre-emptions to actual settlers on the public lands.

The PRESIDENT. It is now proposed to strike out all that has been adopted, and insert what has just been read.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to suggest a single verbal amendment to that amendment, if it meets the approbation of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I observe in one place that the expression, "more than one calendar year," occurs. We have, I believe, but one kind of year now, that which has three hundred and sixty-five days. I therefore suggest that the word "calendar" be stricken out.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will again state the question, in order that Senators may understand it. This bill was originally referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and was reported back by that committee to the Senate with an amendment, which is to strike out the original and insert what is printed in italics. That amendment has been agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the bill has been reported to the Senate and undergone several amendments. The proposition now is to strike out all that amendment as amended, and insert what has been proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of this graduation, and I will go even further than that. I am in favor of giving donations to actual settlers, but I am not in favor of incorporating that bill in this one. I will vote for the bill before the Senate as it is, and hereafter for the other one, if it should come up. I will vote for both of them.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I offer this as a substitute for the bill before us. We must adopt one measure or the other. We must either take this railroad policy, by which the public lands are to be absorbed, or we must agree to a graduation and reduction of prices of the public lands. I prefer the graduation policy for the reasons which I stated yesterday. I believe it more equitable and more just and general in its operation, and more easily understood. It prevents monopolies by a tendency to centralization, and I therefore think it altogether preferable. I offer it, not to be incorporated in the bill, but as a substitute for it.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of both bills. I shall vote for this bill as it is reported by the committee, and I shall also vote for the other bill when it comes up.

Mr. PRATT. If I can be heard, I desire to make a suggestion, and inquire whether or not the substitute offered by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania is in order? The bill upon your table is one to aid in the construction of a railroad in the State of Iowa. The substitute is for the graduation of the price and sale of the public lands. Now, although the railroad in Iowa is to be made by an appropriation of a portion of the public lands, yet the object of the original bill is the railroad, and therefore it does not seem to me that this substitute is germane to this original subject, and consequently it is, as I think, out of order.

The PRESIDENT. There is no rule on the subject. The question under discussion is the disposition of a certain portion of the public domain. An amendment has been made to the bill by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, which amendment is now under consideration by the Senate, and it is therefore open to amendment. The proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania is to strike out the greater portion of that amendment, and insert a substitute, which is another mode of disposing of the public lands.

Mr. DOWNS. Will it be in order to propose an amendment to the substitute, by proposing that instead of striking out the whole bill, the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania shall be added to it?

The PRESIDENT. It would not be in order at this time.

Mr. DOWNS. I suppose we can do it by voting this proposition down as a substitute, and then add it to the bill.

The PRESIDENT. If the Senate think proper to vote down the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania as a substitute, they can do so, and it will then be in order to offer it as an addition to the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As the object of the Senator from Pennsylvania unquestionably is to carry out his favorite policy of graduating the price of the public lands, I have no doubt that he will find that he can accomplish his object much better by bringing it forward in a separate bill. I confess I have a great inclination to go with him in his favorite policy of graduating and reducing the price of the public lands; and I have no doubt that large numbers from the new States will join him in that policy, and probably be able to pass his bill for him if he will bring it forward as a separate proposition, untrammelled by any objections to it as an amendment to this bill. If he will bring it forward separately, I have no doubt that he will find many earnest and zealous coadjutors in the representatives of the new States. I fear that there is some hazard in attaching it to this bill; I fear that by offering it as an amendment to this bill he will lose his graduation policy. I would therefore suggest to him the propriety of bringing it forward as a separate measure, free from the embarrassments hanging around it as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I have debated in my own mind whether I should offer this graduation bill as an amendment to the bill under consideration, because I feared it might embarrass gentlemen in their votes here. But if I adopt the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Illinois and withdraw it now, and subsequently bring it forward as an independent proposition, this railroad grant to Iowa may be passed in the meantime, and then we should have to make other grants. I think, therefore, we had better decide now whether we will adopt the graduating policy, or the railroad policy. You cannot adopt both, in my judgment. I am opposed to this railroad policy for the reasons which I stated pretty fully yesterday. I do not desire to embarrass gentlemen in their votes. I would be very sorry to do so. But I fear, that if I withdraw the amendment now, these railroad bills will all be passed; and then there will be no necessity for, and permit me to say, no propriety in, the adoption of the graduation policy. It would then be left to operate only on the alternate sections.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I appeal to my friend from Pennsylvania to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MANGUM. Mr. President, we are coming to be an extremely wise body. We act on the very largest subjects with all the aids of intuition. Now, I would distrust the ablest man this country ever produced, coming from an old State, who could have but very little knowledge of the land system, or of matters connected with the public domain, who would get up here, and in five minutes, at the end of a tedious session, propose a system of disposition for the entire public domain of the country, without even subjecting it to the investigation of a committee. I understand that the amendment is offered as adversary to the bill under consideration. I hope it will be easily disposed of; and, as the gentleman who has offered it has not been courteous enough to withdraw it at the request of his friends, I trust it will be immediately rejected. I hope we will vote upon it now.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I shall not now withdraw the amendment, but I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SOULE. Mr. President, I must oppose the proposition of my friend from Pennsylvania; and yet I am free to admit, that if it were presented as a distinct and separate measure, from the general features which I have been able to discover in it, I would readily give it my concurrence. But it is very clear that we are in no way prepared to act now upon a matter of such vast importance. It would be assuming, as has been very properly remarked by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, the possession of such great powers of intuition, that I can hardly believe a Senator here would claim. I shall vote, therefore, against this substitute proposed by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania.

I had intended to explain at some length the vote which I mean to give in favor of this Iowa bill; but as I understand that a bill of the same nature concerning the State of Ohio will soon be presented to the consideration of the Senate, and that I shall then have an opportunity to express my views on the subject, I have resolved to give a silent vote in favor of the present bill.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania on this subject. I would say to him that I am as anxious as he can be for the passage of his bill at a proper time; but I would take it as a great favor to me and to my State, if he would withdraw his proposition.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I wish to renew my appeal to my worthy friend from Pennsylvania to withdraw his amendment. I think I have a right to request it, for if there is one sincere friend on this floor of the graduation system in all its scope and bearing, I claim to be that one. The principle has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength, and, therefore, I shall be rejoiced to coöperate with him at a proper time and in a proper manner to effect the passage of that great measure. But I trust the Senator will not, and I know he does not desire to, embarrass our bill and force us to vote down, as we will certainly do, a proposition to which we are as friendly as he can be.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I stated when I first offered this substitute that I did not design to embarrass gentlemen in these votes. I can say to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] that this proposed substitute of mine was not prepared or drawn by me. It is a well-matured measure, one which has been under the consideration of this body before, and which was brought forward by a gentleman from one of the land States. As there seems, however, to be a great desire that I should withdraw this substitute and subsequently offer it as an independent proposition, I think it better for me to do so. I desire that gentlemen shall be unembarrassed in their action here. I was sincere in bringing this proposition to the notice of the Senate. I hope that the original bill will be voted down for the reasons which I stated yesterday, and then I shall bring forward this measure as an independent proposition.

The PRESIDENT. With the permission of the Senate the amendment can be withdrawn.

Mr. PRATT. As the yeas and nays have been called, I desire to record my vote against the proposition.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Have I not the right to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. PRESIDENT. Not except by unanimous consent. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Maryland to object to the withdrawal of the amendment?

Mr. PRATT. Yes sir; I want to have a vote upon the proposition. As the yeas and nays have been called, I believe it is my privilege to require that the vote be taken.

The PRESIDENT. Most assuredly. If the Senator insists on it, the vote must be taken.

Mr. MASON. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania, in offering this amendment, declared distinctly that, in his judgment, on account of the former action of this body on a like proposition, there remained no alternative now but to choose between the policy of giving away these public lands, or a large portion of them, to the States within which they lie, or of adopting an opposing policy of providing for their immediate sale, or their speedy sale, by graduating their price. It was in that view that he offered this proposition as an amendment, and a substitute to that of giving public lands for railroads. I am not prepared to say at present whether I should be disposed, if the option were left to me, to change the existing policy of the Government to that which is proposed by the amendment which the Senator offers. I mean, that I am not prepared to say whether I should be disposed to change the existing laws offering the public lands for sale at a minimum price, for a system of reducing them with a view of speedy sale; but between the two propositions of graduating the price of the public lands and selling them rapidly, and that of giving them away to the States within which they lie, I prefer the former. I shall therefore vote for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, though I should acquiesce cheerfully in allowing him to withdraw it.

Mr. BELL. Mr. President, I would like to hear from the honorable Senator from Virginia, or the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, what security this amendment that is proposed will give to the country, if it should pass, that the land will not still be given away to railroads?

Mr. DOUGLAS. This may obviate some gentleman's objections to the land bills.

Mr. BELL. It seems to me that there will be no security whatever, but that we shall just go on, and whenever we think it is liberal and proper towards the new States, give them additional appropriations for internal improvements. I do not understand that the proposition of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to afford any security on that head, but proposes to hasten the sale of the public lands. Now, it is said that there is a large amount, such an amount as 250,000,000 acres of public land in the market. If that is so, if we reduce them to forty cents an acre, it would take years and years before they could be appropriated; and in the meantime they would remain open to applications to the liberality and justice, if you please, of Congress, in making these improvements. I desire to ascertain whether there be any security contemplated on that point.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would beg leave to interrupt the Senator for a moment. On turning to the rule, which he will read, the Chair is aware that it is in the power of the Senate, even after the yeas and nays have been ordered, to permit the withdrawal of a proposition. The 10th rule is:

"When a motion shall be made and seconded, it shall be reduced to writing, if desired by the President, or any member, delivered in at the table, and read, before the same shall be debated; and any motion may be withdrawn by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays, except a motion to reconsider, which shall not be withdrawn without the leave of the Senate."

"Leave of the Senate" is given by the action of a majority. And therefore the mover of a proposition, even after the yeas and nays have been ordered, (though the Chair just now was under a different impression,) can withdraw it, if a majority of the Senate decide to grant leave.

Mr. BADGER. I move, then, that the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODHEAD] have leave to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MASON. I wish to say a word in answer to what fell from the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL.] I understand that Senator to inquire what security the country will have against this giving away the public lands, even if we should adopt the policy of graduating and reducing their price. Now, sir, I would answer the Senator by saying that, from my experience in this Government, which has been much less than his, I am afraid the people will have no security whatever, and can get none, against the action of Congress. In this very instance, what do we see? Why, in 1847, a law was passed to borrow money. We were then engaged in a war with Mexico. And to establish, or rather to improve the credit of the country, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands were pledged to the payment of that debt. Here is a bill brought in to give them away, at the rate of some 3,800 acres per mile. There is no restraint, then, by the legislation of the country, to the extent that the public faith may be involved by the hypothecation of the proceeds of the public lands.

But I will go further than that. I have seen an instance, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the section of the Union from which I come, in which the action of Congress has not been restrained by constitutional bounds. I am afraid, therefore, when the Senator asks what security we can offer, that we can offer none.

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not propose to offer any security, nor do I suppose that a solitary Senator from one of the land States on this floor proposes to offer any security. Not one.

It has been said time and again, by all the Senators opposed to this bill, or opposed to anything like justice, in any form of a bill which may be presented, to the new States, that they are giving away lands. Now, there is not one of these bills upon the table of any Senator, presented at this or at any former session, that has for its object the giving away of the public lands, for the purpose of making railroads or other improvements. Let the Senator from Virginia propose to strike out that clause of this bill which doubles the price of the public lands upon the alternate sections reserved; and if that is done, then the remainder will be a donation. But until that is done there is no donation. Besides this, there is a clause in the bill providing for the transportation of the troops of the United States, and of the mails of the United States. That, I suppose, may be considered as an equivalent for the right of way through the public lands. If the Senator from Virginia, or any gentleman, can show that this bill, or any other land bill now before the Senate, gives directly or indirectly one cent—one acre of land, or the fraction of an acre of land, to the new States, then I am ready to abandon the whole system.

I do not say that the Senator from Pennsylvania offers this amendment as an expedient to defeat this bill; but it will operate as an expedient to defeat this and all the other land bills. I tell that Senator—and I believe every gentleman representing one of the new States on this floor will tell him the same thing—that we will vote for that bill separately, I prefer that bill; I prefer a graduation bill, upon almost any principle, to this or any other land bill. When this bill was first taken up for discussion, I avowed, and I avow now, that you are giving nothing to the new States. You are conferring no direct favor on the State of Missouri or the State of Iowa by these grants. They have a moral influence, and a moral influence alone, on our own people, inducing them to step forward and advance their money for the construction of these roads. This is all the influence, all the effect they have. We do not draw upon the Treasury of the United States for one cent, or for one acre of land, for which we do not pay an equivalent. I trust that gentlemen will change their phraseology somewhat when they speak of granting lands or of donating lands to the new States. I trust that my friend from Virginia particularly will change his phraseology, or demonstrate that it is a gift.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My friend from Tennessee asked me, what security we have that Congress will not contrive to donate and give away these lands after we shall adopt a graduating policy? In answer to that question, I have only to say that we have this security: We deprive the advocates of this and the other land bills of the principal argument they advance in favor of them. They say they desire to induce the sale and settlement of the public lands. We adopt the policy; and if, to carry it out, we adopt a graduation system, it will be a substitute for what they propose. You cannot have both. As a representative of one of the old States, I beg leave to say that I cannot go for both these measures. I cannot go for the various railroad bills granting some ten, or fifteen, or twenty millions of acres a year, and then go for a graduation policy also. I offer a compromise here. I offer the same measure to the gentlemen from the new States which they have been urging upon Congress for years past, and I ask them now to adopt it in lieu of these various railroad projects.

Mr. RUSK. I would inquire what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to give permission to the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. RUSK. I hope gentlemen will confine themselves to that point.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to make a remark or two, in reply to my friend from Missouri. I think it lamentable that, after months of discussion, we cannot agree upon the facts, but are diametrically opposed as to the facts which exist in the case, and cannot understand them alike. My friend from Missouri says, that if it can be shown that any lands are given away, he will go against the whole system. I have, over and over again, stated that lands are given away by this system. He denied it positively. The question between us is, which of us understands the bill correctly? Now let me state the case in such a clear light that nobody can controvert it. This bill says that the State of Iowa shall receive every alternate section for six miles on each side of the line of the road. The grant, then, is equal to six sections on one side; for, if they get alternate sections for six miles on both sides, it is equal to six miles on one side. That is clear. Nobody can deny that. Now, suppose that by the private entries which have been made, there is left only four sections out of which the selections can be made, what is the consequence of that state of things? Instead of having your whole twelve sections on both sides, out of which to select six, you have only four sections; from which, of course, only two can be selected. Then the bill says the State may make up that deficiency more than six miles from the line of the road. You can only get the half of four, or two sections, within six miles. Then the other four sections to which you are entitled, you get at a distance greater than six miles from the line of the road. Can the gentleman from Missouri deny that those four sections, which you take from more than six miles from the road, are a pure donation to the State without a cent's equivalent in return? Why, it is capable of mathematical demonstration, that the four sections selected more than six miles from the line of the road are given away absolutely and the United States does not receive a cent from them. There is no doubling of the price for those four sections at all; you only double the price upon the half of the four sections which are within the six miles. That is, you double the price upon the two sections selected within the six miles of the road, and do not double the price of the other four sections, selected at a distance of more than six miles from the road.

Mr. DOWNS. Suppose you sold two sections, instead of one before, would not that be doubling?

A SENATOR. It is dinner-time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Some gentlemen say they want their dinners; and I dislike, just upon the eve of the vote, to detain them. I am sorry that we do not agree as to the facts of the bill. When there are only four sections within six miles of each side of the road, the Government is entitled to one half, and the State to the other half. The Government reserves two sections, and the State two sections, within six miles; and then, in the case supposed, if the State makes up the deficiency of four sections, from lands lying more than six miles from the road, beyond the extent of the two sections taken within six miles of the road, it is a perfect and pure donation.

Now a word or two to my constituents, and then I shall have done with this subject forever, I think. I want to say to them, through the Senate, that my liberal (as I think) and enlarged idea of duty, under the Constitution of the country, has carried me for internal improvements upon great national principles. I think we have the whole control of this subject. Although I am not sure but the vote, which I shall give in favor of this bill, will subject me to a very severe responsibility at home, I shall not shrink from it; for I have been accustomed to meet responsibility. All its terrors have no dread for me. I may say with my friend from

New Hampshire, that I have no political hopes or aspirations. I retire to private life; but I intend to carry with me the approbation of my conscience, and the conviction that I have done what I believed to be right. I have heretofore voted for all these bills, upon those high principles which I have advocated before this Senate. Seeing no chance to get that justice which I believe we ought to have, and would have had, under the provisions of the amendment which I had the honor of offering—seeing no prospect, under the present state of things, of having the land fund inure as a common benefit to all the States, I will not act the part of the dog in the manger, I will not refuse to do good for evil. I will act upon the principle, that the day is coming when justice will animate the hearts of the American people. I act upon the principle, that truth is omnipotent, and will ultimately prevail. I believe that, if the people of the United States will take this great subject into consideration, they will see that the old States are entitled to some participation in this great fund; that the new States are not entitled to all its benefits. Although I think I have been pretty harshly treated in the course of this discussion, in some respects, yet I cheerfully give them what I think they are entitled to, in these bills; hoping, that when that public reconsideration takes place, which I hope may take place, not only the old States, but the new States, will see the propriety of acting upon the principle that I have advocated here, and upon which I intend to stand. With these views, I am ready to vote.

The motion to grant leave to withdraw the amendment of Mr. BRODHEAD was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, on the amendment that has been made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not propose to detain the Senate, but I happened accidentally to be out when the vote was taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, and when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] made some explanations with regard to the bill. I wish to know whether he understands the bill as restraining the State of Iowa from taking alternate sections, that were reserved by the Government when the grant was made for the improvement of Des Moines river.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I so understand it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not see any such reservation in the bill; but I wish to make a single remark in reply to the Senator from Missouri. He pledged himself that he would abandon the bill, if it could be shown that one acre of the public lands granted for these purposes was a gift. He further remarked that if we reduced the price of alternate sections, it would be a gift; but that inasmuch as the price of the alternate sections reserved was increased or doubled, that prevented the grant from being a donation; and he proceeded to remark that he was ready to vote for the graduation bill presented by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, if it were brought forward as a separate proposition. That graduation bill reduces the price of the alternate sections not only to the amount which they now are, but to a much less amount than that now asked for them. The declaration of the Senator was, that such a reduction would constitute this grant a gift; and in that event, he said he would go against the bill. Believing that he will vote, as he pledged the Senator from Pennsylvania that he would, for a bill for the reduction of the price of the public lands, we have a right to claim that he will vote against this bill. I think he stands so pledged.

The amendment made in Committee of the Whole was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. BELL. Some of my friends have said that I would be acting somewhat inconsistently if I voted for this bill. I do not propose now to go into an explanation of the grants. Perhaps some other occasion will arise when I can do so. I said in my remarks on this subject, that whatever might be the fate of the amendment, I would give my vote for the bill. I think I can reconcile it with the vote I have given for similar bills heretofore; but if the Senate will allow me to ask the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] one question before they vote, I shall be very much obliged to them. It is an explanation with regard to the vote upon a bill for an appropriation to Alabama and Mississippi of public lands connected with the Illinois railroad; and this I connect (to show that I am not out of order altogether in my remarks on this occasion) with the grounds which I assume, in part, for voting for this bill in favor of Iowa and other new States, as I have voted for Illinois, for the Southern States, Mississippi, and Alabama, and would have voted for Michigan and Wisconsin, had they been up, and do expect to vote for them, and as I would have voted for appropriations made in behalf of the public improvements in the State of Indiana.

Now, sir, what I wish to state is, that when that bill was up two sessions ago, I assumed the same principle in argument that I did the other day, and that was, that if there be anything in the principle of Congress having the power to give a portion of this estate to improve the remainder of it, they could give lands lying in Illinois, in Mississippi, or in Alabama, to construct a railroad through Kentucky and Tennessee; that the principle was the same, if by connecting these two roads you improve the whole body of the public domain on each extremity, or wherever it exists on the line of the railroad. And I wanted to state, that when the bill appropriating some 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 of acres, I presume, to Alabama, Mississippi, and Illinois was up, I made the proposition directly that a fair, ratable proportion of the lands proposed to be appropriated by that bill to those States, should be applied, when sold by them, to the completion of the connecting link between Cairo, at the mouth of the Ohio, and the southern boundary of Tennessee, going through a part of Tennessee and Kentucky; but I was advised by the friends of the measure—I had always been in favor of liberal appropriations of the public lands to the new States—that if I pressed my amendment, it would inevitably defeat the whole measure. Upon consultation with the Senator from Illinois—and this is the point to which I wish to call his attention and upon which I want his statement—he said to me that his judgment was the same with regard to pressing my amendment; but he thought that a proper and fair construction of the bill, then, as I had the impression until recently, did make the lands or the proceeds of them liable to be appropriated ratably, according to the terms of that act, for the construction of the road through Tennessee and Kentucky. I must be mistaken in that impression, because, on looking over the bill, I do not see any clear pretext for stating that the lands appropriated in Illinois should be thus applied; but I rather think the lands appropriated to Mississippi and Alabama do bear that construction. What I want now, is for the honorable Senator to state what is his recollection of that conversation, and of his impression at that time as to the proper construction of that act, in justice to myself for having forborne to press that amendment, although I was expected to do so, by some friends of that connecting link in Tennessee and Kentucky.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have not a distinct recollection of the conversation to which the Senator from Tennessee refers, although I have a very strong impression upon my mind of having had my attention called to that provision of the bill by some one—probably the Senator from Tennessee—and of the impression resting upon my mind at that time. The Illinois bill, when written by myself, only extended to the State of Illinois, and did not contemplate the construction of any road beyond the limits of that State. When an amendment was offered—I think by the present presiding officer of the body—to extend that road from the mouth of the Ohio to Mobile, and to grant to the States of Mississippi and Alabama lands on the same condition, to the same extent, and with the same privileges as the other road, it did not occur to me that that language would make any grant for making a road in Tennessee and Kentucky, but simply be confined to Mississippi and Alabama. At a subsequent period, my attention was called to the language used in the amendment, and I confess it was my impression then, and it is yet, that the language employed in it does not bear the construction that the lands were to be selected in Mississippi and Alabama, not only for a road in those States, but for one from the line of the State of Mississippi up to the mouth of the Ohio river. That is still my impression of the fair construction of that language, although at the time the measure was brought forward, it had never occurred to me that any such construction could be put upon it.

Mr. BELL. That is the precise way in which I understood the honorable Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I was desirous of saying something upon this subject, but I do not propose doing so this evening, and relinquish my purpose because of the state of my health. But I wish, before the vote is taken, to put myself in a position so that I may not be hereafter deemed inconsistent in whatever course I may pursue in regard to it. I have seen it stated that there are now bills before the two Houses of Congress for roads to be constructed by a grant of alternate sections through the public lands, sufficient in number and sufficient in amount to take some 30,000,000 acres of the public lands to satisfy the proposed grants.

If I vote for this bill—and I believe I have generally voted for measures of this character when they have appeared to be sanctioned by a sound discretion and by a promise of usefulness—I do not wish that it shall be hereafter understood that I commit myself to a system like that; I do not wish it to be understood that I bind myself by any obligation to vote for these various measures as they may be successively presented for the consideration of Congress; for when we come to a point like that, where thirty millions, or any great quantity, be it greater or less, of the public lands is to be disposed of by bills of this character, it strikes me that it is a proposition of a very grave import, that it deserves the very deliberate consideration of Congress, and that it should be understood in all its bearings. One of the objections which I oftenest hear raised here—is the protest which is made in terms of fervent expostulation against speculators. They are everywhere denounced in the halls of Congress, as persons the most prejudicial and injurious to the public interests with regard to the public lands. Well, what do we see occurring here among those who raise this objection? One of the first grants, the entering wedge of this great system, is made to the State of Illinois, of some 3,000,000 acres, or perhaps a little short of that; and now we are advised, by gentlemen in their places here, that it is arranged to pass that property out of the hands of the State of Illinois into the hands of a private company; so that a company of speculators, if you please, shall become the possessors of 3,000,000 acres of land in the State of Illinois.

Again: it is deprecated, and has been deprecated this morning in very solemn and apparently anxious terms, that a State should not be a possessor of public lands within a State; and yet, sir, it is the very gist of every one of these measures that a State should be the owner of the public lands, and become the competitor of the United States in the sale of public lands; and I notice when a State is to profit by it, delay of sale constitutes no objection. Then, again, we are really treated with some degree of scorn and contempt when we suggest that this is a benefit to the States; for a gentleman has just taken his seat who says that we give nothing to the States. Does not Illinois get the land—and land owned by the United States? And does not Illinois propose to make a railroad out of the land? And are not all these schemes founded on the idea that money and funds are to be raised out of the lands by which the enterprise is to be carried into effect? Nobody disputes this; and is this nothing? Can the money be obtained or the road made without the land? But the gentleman assumes, because he puts down upon paper that the alternate sections reserved to the United States shall not be sold for less than $2 50 per acre, that the consequence is, that the United States realize just as much funds as if they had parted with none of the land. Now, will the Senator from Missouri, will the Senator from Illinois, will any of the gentlemen who take the benefit of these lands guarantee to the United States $2 50 per acre? Will they put a provision in the bill that the United States shall realize that sum? That is the precise point of difficulty that I have in the whole matter. All the assumption and all the reasoning is founded upon the idea that the United States are, with certainty, to realize $2 50 per acre for these lands. If you go to past experience, I think the matter will turn out quite otherwise; that the United States, when they have granted alternate sections, have realized nothing but the minimum price. That is the result of my observation in relation to it, and I confess myself disappointed in regard to it; for there was a time when I anticipated better results.

But, sir, while I am throwing out these suggestions—and I do not mean to continue them—I am willing to vote for any of these enterprises that shall promote the public good, leaving each to stand upon its own merits. But I am rather grieved that gentlemen should rise here and repudiate the idea that they are receiving any benefit from them; holding out the idea, while they insist on having the land, that nothing is bestowed. It seems to me to be a false assumption, and to smack a little of ingratitude. I probably shall give my vote for this bill; but I wish to say one word more in regard to it, and then I shall have done.

There is one portion of it, of which I approve very much; and there is another portion that is not, to my mind, so plainly of public utility. I do not see why it is expedient or necessary that there should be a road to run parallel with the Mississippi river, unless the navigation and improvements of that river are to be abandoned. Now, I do not suppose that the building of this road involves that question. I take it that the Mississippi river is to go on and be a public highway, and that we are still to be asked to make grants for its improvement. If we are, then I do not see my way clear to vote for a road which runs parallel, or nearly parallel, with the river. But still, Iowa thinks it ought to have the privilege of fixing these roads as it pleases. If it had been content to take a little less, to run its road from the river into the interior, opening new sources of commerce, I should be very well satisfied with it. I do not know whether I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind, whether the objection I now raise is not such as ought to induce me to vote against the bill; but I wish to throw out these ideas before I vote, that I may not, for one, be considered as committed to this immense system in prospect, by voting for this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have but a word to say. I cannot understand these gentlemen who argue to us that the alternate sections, which are reserved to the United States, will not be worth $2 50 per acre, while at the same time they turn round in their arguments and charge that these large grants to us for making railroads are worth $10 per acre.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator does not mean to intimate that I said any such thing.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, sir; I only say that those who act with him argue thus. For instance, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] the other day, in an argument against the Illinois bill, went on to prove that the 2,700,000 acres granted to Illinois were worth twenty odd millions of dollars; and he went on to prove that every acre of land granted by that act of Congress to the State to aid in making the road, would be worth ten dollars in consequence of the making of the road; and after summing up these enormous figures against Illinois, and Alabama, and Mississippi, to show how many millions these three States had made out of the Federal Government by getting this quantity of land, he turned round and said the Government lands are not one further enhanced in value. How is it then? If you benefit Illinois twenty odd millions, do you not benefit the United States twenty odd millions more, by reserving the alternate sections to yourselves which are to be enhanced in value by the construction of the road? I think if you benefit us that much, you benefit yourselves to the same extent. I care not whether it is twenty-one millions, or ten millions, or five millions, or how much it is. You must admit either that you have enhanced the value of the public domain belonging to the Government of the United States by the grant, or else that these lands granted to us were worth but $1 25 per acre. But it seems that one rule of computation prevails when you count the advantages of the State, and a different one prevails when you compute the advantages to the United States. My opinion is, that the Senator from Georgia made an over-estimate when he put them at $10 per acre. My opinion is, that when you put them at $2 50, it is an under-estimate; and, therefore, that it is a fair argument to assume that the one half reserved to the United States is worth more than the whole of the lands would have been if the grant had not been made, and if the road should not be constructed. That is the view we take; and when we say that you are giving us nothing, we do not mean that the grant is not beneficial to us; but we assert that it is also beneficial to the Government of the United States. Is it any argument against it, that it benefits us while it benefits you to the same extent? That is the only point on which we base this.

One word about our transferring these lands to a company. I did not suppose it was a matter of any consequence to the public, or to the Government of the United States, whether the State of Illinois sold these lands and made the road herself, or whether she gave them to a company to make the road by disposing of the lands, provided that we comply with our contract with the Government—provided that we make the road within the time specified, and carry the mails as we agreed to do—and provided we comply with all the stipulations which you choose to impose. But I intend to show to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is a wide distinction between our passing an act of Congress vesting the titles of lands lying in the State of Illinois, in the State of Massachusetts, or in any other State, and giving the title to the Illinois Legislature, and allowing that State to provide for the making of the road. When you give lands to the States within which they lie for the purpose of making a road, the State will make such arrangements with regard to taxation—with regard to the time for selling the lands—with regard to the construction of the road—with regard to preemption rights and settlement—as for itself each State shall deem wise and proper with reference to its own interests; but if Congress here makes a grant of land to a foreign corporation, the State has no such power over that corporation to provide these conditions—to provide for the protection of its own citizens. There is the great point of distinction. The distinction we have is in accordance with State-rights. We wish to reserve to each of the States the power to protect its own interests against any of these speculations. If Illinois has made a bad contract, she has only to blame herself. She cannot blame the Federal Government. We are content with the contract which we have made, and so ought you to be content, because you will find that we will make the road which we stipulated to make within half the time you allowed us for making it. If we give you the road in five years instead of ten years, as was stipulated, we think it should not be a matter of complaint urged against us; and if we make more money out of it than you expected, it ought not to be any objection when you make just as much as we do; and when you, therefore, have been benefited more than you expected to be when you made the grant.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am not aware of having expressed any opinion, or entertained any sentiment which would authorize the construction that I urged any such argument as the Senator suggests several persons have urged—that is, that the lands granted to Illinois are worth $10 per acre.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I said that the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson], who was acting with the Senator from Massachusetts against the bill, urged it.

Mr. DAVIS. I am not acting against the bill. I was addressing the Senate on the policy generally. I announced that I intended to vote for the bill. But I wish the whole subject to be spread before the Senate. I wish now to say, that I think there is no inconsiderable share of delusion on this subject; and that the hopes and expectations which are put forth in regard to these lands are destined to be disappointed. That there is to be no such sum realized as was suggested by the Senator from Georgia, is quite apparent, unless there is a change in the state of things. All our experience leads us to a different conclusion from that of the honorable Senator from Georgia. All our experience shows us, that no such hopes and no such expectations have hitherto been realized; and that is what makes me doubt very much whether we realize even the $2 50 per acre. Perhaps the Senator [Mr. Douglas] participates in the same doubt, as he takes no notice of the guarantee which I proposed of $2 50 per acre. I do not mean to deny the proposition which the Senator states, that running a railroad through a section of country, has a tendency to increase the value of lands. And if it were not a fact that the quantity of land brought into the market is immensely increased every year; and if it were not that the territory exposed to sale was not so vastly extended, it would have a very serious influence. But so long as there is good land to be obtained in any quantities, in portions of the country where it is desirable to settle, at the minimum price, so long will the price of land be kept down. There may be particular places and particular points, having a value from contingent causes, that will command larger prices. But the general price of land for agricultural purposes, according to our experience, does not justify any hopes of extravagant prices, even where improvements go.

I have made no complaint of the State of Illinois for undertaking to make her railroad through a company. I think she is a little unjust towards us, if she condemns the United States for retarding settlements by sales at the minimum price for settlement, and when the lands are given to her, holds them up for higher prices, or puts them into the hands of private companies, raising expectations that they, in time, may realize more. She insists that we shall encourage settlement; but takes to herself the right to speculate. She disapproves of individual proprietors, if they are speculators or corporations, as prejudicial to her interests, if they buy of the United States; but when they buy of her, it is quite a different matter, and quite a wholesome good policy, though it may not promote settlement. The practice of the United States to hold land at $1 25 per acre is oppressive; while Illinois may hold it at twice that, without objection. I placed these conditions in contrast with each other. This is all I intended; and let the argument pass for what it is worth. It is growing large, and I will not detain the Senate.

Mr. RHETT. Mr. President, I wish to say but a few words in defense of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson], who is not now here. Neither of the Senators from that State is now on this floor. I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Douglas] has not to-day done, and I think the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] did not yesterday do, entire justice to that Senator. I understand his position to be this: that, according to the statement of the company to which the State of Illinois had turned over all her lands, they expected to realize $10 per acre on the lands received by them. They had organized their company upon that supposition, and the Senator from Georgia took it as being a fact, and therefore thought it a fair position for argument before the Senate. Is it not so? The Senator from Georgia did not mean to say that alternate sections may not appreciate up to the amount of double the previous price, when they were capable of being brought into market at any time, and as soon as purchasers wanted them; but he intended to say that the State of Illinois, by making a contract by which she turned over these lands to a company, to be held by them indefinitely, and without any limitation whatever, gave to the company the power of realizing $10 per acre on these lands. That was his position; and does anybody doubt but that that position is true?

When the proposition was made here the other day, that lands should be given to the old States, to be located in the new States, did not my friend from Iowa [Mr. Dodge] speak of it in terms of indignation? Why, he nearly looked, if he did not entirely use, the word "Nullification." I felt pretty sure that he would almost favor nullification to prevent it. If I understood his views and temper on that subject, he would not allow the old States to have a great mass of land in Iowa, to be controlled by them, and kept out of market just so long as they pleased for speculating purposes. Yet, what has the State of Illinois done? What do these new States do, which thus rebuke with such force and such anger, the proposition to consolidate large masses of land in them, beyond what are needed by their settlers? Illinois has made a contract with a company to build the road, and not an acre of land, I believe, is to be sold, until the road is made; and after the road is made, the company is to have entire control of the land. That I understand to be the nature of the contract between the State of Illinois and the company to which she has granted these lands. I believe I am correct in this. If I am not, I should like to be put right.

Mr. SHIELDS. The land is to be sold as the road progresses. The land still belongs to the State, and is only given to the company conditionally, and is to be appropriated gradually for the construction of the road, and for no other purpose.

Mr. RHETT. But if they construct the road, do they not get the land? Do they not get it as they go along, in sections? Do they not then appropriate the land, and keep it as long as they choose?

Mr. SHIELDS. They receive the land as they go on with the work.

Mr. RHETT. But they get the land, and can use it, and keep it in market as long as they please.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator is mistaken in one thing. They are bound to sell the land. They cannot retain it. There are terms imposed on them for the construction of the road. The land is given to them for that purpose. They cannot speculate upon it, and hold it up.

Mr. RHETT. That is only going round the path. The company get the land for making the road; and when they get it, they can hold it as long as they please. They are not bound to convert the land into money within any specified time. That is the practical operation of it; and so I understood from a certain gentleman with whom I conversed on the subject.

Now, what I wish to say is this: that the position of the Senator from Georgia was based upon the fact that this company in Illinois had the power of holding lands there, and that the practical effect of the arrangement made with the State of Illinois was, that the company could hold these lands as long as it pleased, and realize from them what it pleased. The company estimated these lands to be worth, to it, $10 per acre; and on that supposition the Senator from Georgia came forward, and said that this company expected to realize that amount according to its own statement. And that it will do it, appears to be very reasonable. I have no doubt it will be done. It may take some time to accomplish it, but it will eventually be done. I think, therefore, that the Senator from Georgia, in his view of it, steers entirely clear of the position taken by the Senator from Illinois. The Senator from Georgia did not say that the United States would not realize that amount from their lands; but he said that if you allowed any proprietor of lands, either a company or a State, to hold them as long as it pleased, it could appreciate them up to $10 per acre. That is all he did assert. It seems to me that there is no incompatibility between the position taken by the Senator from Georgia, and that taken by the Senator from Illinois.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 16, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER stated, as the first business in order, the reception of reports from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOUSTON moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up the deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON asked the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I have had at least a dozen applications from gentlemen having similar requests to prefer to the House. The gentleman knows the very great difficulty I have had in arriving at the point which I have now reached, and I hope, therefore, he will withdraw his request, and let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up the deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, sir. I will not press my request.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have a similar request to make; but, under the circumstances, I will withhold it.

Mr. ORR. I was desirous of making a report or two from the Committee on Public Lands, but I have no objection to withhold them.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection to the motion of my colleague, if it is understood that, as a matter of course, the deficiency bill will come up in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is by universal consent agreed, I believe, that the deficiency bill should be taken up.

Mr. COBB. Very well, sir. Then I have no objection to my colleague's motion.

The question was then taken on Mr. Houston's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. MEADE in the chair.)

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the committee proceeded to consider House bill No. 207, "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852."

Mr. HILLYER obtained the floor and said: Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a remark made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] some weeks ago, in reply to the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. CABELL,] in which the honorable gentleman from Virginia took occasion to say of the Union party of Georgia, that it was composed of factions of all parties, and he saw proper to apply to that honorable and patriotic association, the term "piebald."

Mr. McMULLIN, (interrupting.) I did use the word attributed to me by the honorable gentleman, but I used it under the excitement of the moment. I intended nothing disrespectful to that party; for the gentleman is, perhaps, not aware that I acted and cooperated with it during the last Congress.

But, sir, with the permission of the gentleman from Georgia, I will make one further remark, for I do not expect to trespass upon the House again. I did feel somewhat sensitive upon the subject of the Union party—

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a point of order. If the House chooses to permit this latitude of debate to the delay of the public business, so be it; but I feel it my duty to make the point of order. I ask for the reading of the 31st rule.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would inquire of the gentleman from New York, whether he makes his point of order on the gentleman from Georgia or on myself?

Mr. BROOKS. On both of you.

The Clerk then read the 31st rule, as follows:

"When any member is about to speak in debate, or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise from his seat, and respectfully address himself to 'Mr. Speaker'; and shall confine himself to the question under debate, and avoid personality."

Mr. BROOKS. Now, with the greatest respect for both of the gentlemen opposite, but from the imperious necessity of transacting the public business, I make this point of order, that in a debate on the deficiency bill, it is not in order to discuss matters relative to party.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the rule, construed literally, would preclude the remarks of the gentlemen from Georgia and Virginia; but under the uniform practice of the House, the Chair cannot now undertake to rule them out of order; and therefore rules the gentleman to be in order.

Mr. BROOKS. With the permission of the Chair, I will remark that I am well aware the Chair has decided according to the practice of the House this session; but during the last Congress, in three or four cases, when it was imperiously necessary to transact the public business, the House did confine itself literally to the rule, because it found it utterly impossible to debate the real question under consideration if it did not so confine itself. It will be impossible hereafter to debate any matter of public business whatsoever, unless upon some bill like this the House will confine itself within its rules.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This question is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable; but if the gentleman from New York wishes to get the sense of the committee, he can take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BROOKS. I feel it my duty, from the imperious necessity of transacting the public business, to take an appeal.

Mr. EVANS. I am perfectly aware that the Chair has decided in conformity with what has latterly been the practice of the House.

Mr. JONES. It is not in order to debate the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is out of order in debating this question. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] raises the point of order that the gentlemen from Georgia and Virginia are out of order in debating any other proposition than the deficiency bill, now before the committee. The Chair has decided the gentlemen from Georgia and Virginia to be in order, in conformity with the practice heretofore observed by the committee. From that decision the gentleman from New York appeals, and the question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. EVANS. I respectfully call the attention of the Chair to the note to the second rule, and also to the 35th rule. I think if the Chair consults those rules, he will not decide me to be out of order in debating this appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order, in the opinion of the Chair. He can take an appeal from that decision, if he desires it.

Mr. EVANS. I cannot take an appeal, for there is one already pending.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from New York has taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair; does the Chair decide that that appeal is not debatable? It seems to me that if there are any cases in which appeals are debatable, this is clearly one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the appeal is not debatable. Is an appeal taken from that decision?

Mr. HOUSTON. You cannot pile appeal on appeal.

Mr. BROOKS. I must ask for tellers on my appeal.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and BEALE appointed.

The question was then taken, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 79, noes 42.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained, and the remarks of the gentlemen from Georgia and Virginia were ruled to be in order.

Mr. HILLYER resumed his remarks. He had no objection to excuse the gentleman from Virginia; but the same principles and opinions had been avowed by others with reference to the Union party of Georgia. He was proud to say this day, on this floor, that, instead of being composed of factions of all parties, from the mountains to the seaboard, and all along the line, there is not in it one Abolitionist, not one Free-soiler, not one man for a tariff for protection, and so far as he knew and believed, there was not one bank man, not one internal improvement man; but all within that mighty host are for a strict construction of the Constitution, and for the sovereign rights of the States.

He then vindicated the Union party of Georgia, showing the causes which led to its formation, which was from necessity, founded in patriotism, and under circumstances beyond their control; and towards the conclusion of his remarks, he favored the sending of delegates to the Baltimore Convention, conceiving that the principles of the Democratic party are coëvil with those on which our Government is established.

Mr. GIDDINGS next addressed the committee against the fugitive slave law, slavery in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and the coast-wise slave trade. Those who sustain the compromise, he maintained, vote to continue the slave trade; and as to a fugitive slave, the people in the States are no more bound to seize and deliver him to the person claiming to be his owner, than they are to deliver up a runaway horse in the streets. He denied the constitutional right to the Federal Government to legislate for the maintenance of slavery. The curses, and blessings if there be any, of it, belong to the South, and with which the North wish to have nothing to do, and should not be required to sustain the burdens in connection with it.

Mr. JACKSON next obtained the floor. He defended his own course and the State-Rights party of the State of Georgia, one of whose representatives, he said, he had the honor to be. If the people who sent him to Congress are disunionists, the inference is that he had forgotten his duty to his country, and is a disunionist; but in his political course of twenty years he had never felt the first desire to see the Union of his country dissolved. Although a Union man, according to a strict construction of the Constitution, he had always been a Democrat; and he would permit no constitutional Union man, or Southern man to cut him off from his connection with the Democratic party.

[These speeches will be found in the Appendix.] Mr. APPLETON, of Maine, here obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. ORR, who moved that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

PROPOSITION TO CLOSE DEBATE.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to offer to the House a resolution to terminate debate upon the bill which has been under discussion to-day. It must be evident to the House that all of the debate which is pertinent to the propositions contained in this bill must be had under the five-minutes rule, or else we must change the mode of speaking. Not a word, not an allusion has been made to-day to the bill under consideration. I propose, therefore, a resolution terminating debate on it to-morrow at four o'clock; and on Thursday we can carry on the five minutes debate, and finish up the speaking.

Mr. EVANS. I do not intend to object to this resolution, but I do trust that upon a bill of such importance gentlemen of the House will see the necessity of its being debated.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must be aware that this is not a debatable question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to suggest to my friend from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] the fact that we shall have no debate upon the merits of the bill, in all probability, until we have the five-minutes rule, and I want to get to the debate upon it in that way. These speeches have no relation to the bill whatever, or to its provisions.

Mr. EVANS. It is true, as the gentleman states, that the debate here has been upon everything inappropriate to the subject under consideration, and I think that it is a warning to the House to enforce its rules.

Mr. HOUSTON. We have tried that.

Mr. EVANS. I do not wish to speak against the wishes of the House, and if it is the sense of the House that I shall not say anything I will sit down.

Mr. ORR. I wish to make a modification of the resolution.

Mr. EVANS. I will give you an opportunity.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. EVANS. I am proceeding by unanimous consent, if not I will take my seat.

Mr. KING, of New York. If the gentleman is asking that the rules be enforced, I hope he will observe them himself. I object to the discussion.

Mr. POLK. Is it proper to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means a question?

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. POLK. I merely wish to ask him the amount of the deficiency which this bill proposes to appropriate.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is about $3,000,000.

Mr. POLK. Then I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, if he desires this House to consider, under the five-minutes rule, a proposition appropriating $3,000,000?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. I suppose the House will allow me to do so. If any legitimate debate had been proposed upon this bill, I should not have asked a termination of it. As long as gentlemen should legitimately debate the provisions of the bill, I would not propose to stop it. The gentleman talks of five minutes. That is the only legitimate debate that I expect to have, and I want as much time to appropriate to five minutes debate as possible.

Mr. POLK. I hope that the House will indulge me a moment.

Mr. STUART. I cannot, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Debate cannot be had, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. POLK. I wish to ask another question.

Mr. ORR. I propose to amend, by striking out "four o'clock," and insert "Saturday, at three o'clock."

Mr. EVANS. I move to amend the amendment, so as to provide that all debate not upon the merits of the question, after to-morrow at two o'clock, shall be out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLEVELAND. I move the House adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

So the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE gave notice that he would, on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to bring in a bill granting to the State of Pennsylvania 1,000,000 acres of the public lands to aid in the construction of the Pittsburg, Kittanning, and Warren railroad.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 17, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

NEW SENATORS.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I have been requested to present the credentials of the Hon. JOHN B. WELLER, elected a Senator of the United States from the State of California.

The credentials were read.

Mr. McRAE. I ask leave to present to the Senate the credentials of the honorable STEPHEN ADAMS, recently elected by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the honorable Jefferson Davis, which has been for a short time humbly filled by myself. I presenting these credentials, I take my leave of you, Mr. President, and of the Senate, with the most cordial good feeling towards all the Senators, for the uniform courtesy and kindness they have shown to me, from the time I took my seat here until the present moment.

The credentials were read, and the honorable Messrs. WELLER and ADAMS came forward; and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats.

LEGISLATION OF OREGON.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate copies of the Journal and acts of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon, of the second session thereof, begun and held at Oregon City, December 2, 1850, transmitted to him by the Secretary of that Territory, in obedience to law; which were ordered to be referred to the Committee on Territories.

RELIEF OF AMERICANS ABROAD.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair has received a memorial from Mr. John Randolph Clay, our Chargé d'Affaires at Lima, setting forth that there are numerous American citizens thrown upon the shores of that country in very destitute circumstances. He states that the Consul of the United States there and himself have exhausted all their means in endeavoring to relieve these unfortunate men. There is no provision of Congress for it. The only act of Congress on the subject relates to seamen, and provides that when they shall be in destitute circumstances abroad, they shall be relieved and sent home by the consuls of the United States. The memorialist asks that some provision may be made by which these destitute men may be furnished with bread, which they are unable to obtain in a foreign land.

Mr. HAMLIN. This memorial, it seems to me, involves a question somewhat of a commercial character. It also has some connection with our consular system. It might, perhaps, appropriately be referred to the Committee on Commerce; but I am inclined to think it has a more intimate connection with our foreign relations, and therefore move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BADGER presented the memorial of Rhoda McRae, praying the appointment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on that subject.

Mr. SOULE. I am requested to present to the Senate the petition of A. Boyd, praying the reimbursement of certain expenses incurred by him in taking the census in the parish of Iberville, Louisiana. In presenting this petition, I wish to say, that this individual performed the duty of taking the census under the most trying circumstances. The parish in which he had to exercise his jurisdiction was overflowed by the Mississippi, and, in consequence of that, he had to incur expenses which were not contemplated when he was appointed. He now applies to Congress in order to be compensated for those expenses. I recommend the petition to the serious attention of the Committee of Claims, to which I move that it be referred.

It was so referred.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a petition of merchants and other citizens of Savannah, Georgia, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steamships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, the petition of Edward Milton, late a sergeant in the Army, praying an increase of pension, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a memorial of officers of the army stationed at Fort Monroe, Virginia, praying that the quarters of officers at the permanent military posts may be furnished; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the memorial of the widow of John Balster, who was killed at Charleston arsenal while in the discharge of his duty; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NORRIS presented a petition of citizens of Hinsdale, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of Emily H. Plummer, widow of Samuel M. Plummer, late an officer in the Army, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, ten petitions of citizens of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the tariff; and a petition of iron workers of Norristown, Pennsylvania, praying an increase of the duties on iron; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a petition of citizens of Middletown, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. BORLAND. I present the memorial of Lieutenant Raphael Semmes, of the Navy, praying an extra allowance, at the rate of $700 a year, for services in the Coast Survey. In presenting it, I think it proper to state what is the ground of the application. A survey of the coast between Appalachicola Bay and the Mississippi river was ordered a few years ago, and Lieutenant Powell, of the Navy, was directed to make it. Before Lieutenant Powell had completed the survey, he was superseded by Lieutenant Semmes, who completed it. Lieutenant Powell applied to the Department for the usual extra allowance as commander of the expedition. The Department being unable to pay it, for want of authority, application was made to Congress, and an appropriation of money ($10,000) was voted to pay all those extra and incidental expenses. The appropriation was in part expended in the payment of Lieutenant Powell and the men under his command. After Lieutenant Semmes had completed the survey, he also made application upon the ground upon which his predecessor had been paid. He was informed that the appropriation which was made exceeded the amount which Lieutenant Powell and those associated with him had claimed, but that the surplus had been transferred to another fund, called, I believe, the surplus fund; and hence he could not be paid, as a specific appropriation for that purpose was not then at the disposal of the Government. But the Fourth Auditor, who examined the claim of Lieutenant Semmes, states to him, in a letter, which I present along with the memorial, that the claim stands on precisely the same principles as that of Lieutenant Powell, which has already been paid; and that Lieutenant Semmes would have been paid but for the transfer being made prior to the application. He comes forward now and asks Congress to make him an appropriation to cover his claim, which rests on the same foundation with the claim of Lieutenant Powell, which has already been paid. I ask that the memorial and the letter of the Fourth Auditor accompanying it, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

They were so referred.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Francis B. Stockton, praying the return of a certain sum paid by him, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPHAM, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the petition of H. N. Denison, praying payment for a draft, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred a memorial of the Legislature of Alabama, in relation to extending the time for selecting school lands, reported a bill to extend the provisions of an act, approved February 26, 1845, entitled "An act to amend an act to carry into effect, in the States of Alabama and Mississippi, the existing compacts with these States, with regard to the five per cent. fund and the school reservations; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred documents relating to the claim of John Newton, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of citizens of Guthrie county, Iowa, praying for a donation of land for a county seat, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADBURY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the papers in the case of Walter Colton, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Walter Colton; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the managers on the part of the Senate, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill, entitled "An act to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes," reported that they have met the managers on the part of the House, and after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses, to strike out the word "act," where it first occurs in the third line of the first proviso proposed to the first section of the bill by the House, and insert in lieu thereof the word laws. Insert after the word "located," in the said third line of said first proviso, the words, according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and in one body. And with these amendments, they recommend that the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the first section of the bill.

Strike out all after the word warrants, in the twelfth line of the second section, to the end of the section. And with this amendment, they recommend that the House recede from its amendment, striking out all of said bill after the first section.

JAMES SHIELDS,
ALPHEUS FELCH,
TRUMAN SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEORGE W. JONES,
GEORGE BRIGGS,
GRAHAM N. FITCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. S. I will state, for the information of the Senate, that the only change that has been made in the Senate bill is in regard to one principle. The report of the Committee of Conference leaves the bill precisely as it was when it left this body, including a provision for the compensation of registers and receivers—giving them the ordinary compensation for their services, only requiring that the holder of the warrant, whether he is the assignee or the original holder, shall pay the officer himself. This bill makes the warrants very valuable; and hence we have made this change. As the Senate bill originally stood, the assignee paid the officers for locating the warrants; but if it were located by the original holder, the amount was to be paid by the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask leave to interrupt the honorable Senator. The Chair finds, on inquiry, that the bill is in the possession of the House of Representatives. The House must, therefore, first act upon the report of the committee of conference; and, until the bill is returned from the House, there can be no action of the Senate in regard to it.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the vote cannot be taken at this time on the report, I suppose it will hardly be necessary to explain the amendment. I move that the report be printed, and that will, perhaps, save me the necessity of making any explanation of the matter when it comes up again.

Mr. BADGER. I trust that the honorable Senator from Illinois will now give an explanation of the amendments.

Mr. SHIELDS. As it may save trouble on another occasion, I will state the purport now. The bill, as proposed to be left by the committee of conference, gives compensation to the registers and receivers, makes bounty land warrants assignable in all cases, and enables either the original holder or the assignee to locate them upon any land subject to private entry at the time of the location, and they themselves pay the expenses. If the warrants are to be located on lands where the minimum price is more than $1 25, as for instance, on the reserved land in Illinois and other States, where the price is $2 50, the person who holds the warrant can make the location by paying the residue in cash. With this exception, the bill is the same as it passed the Senate.

The report was ordered to be printed.

STEAM FERRY-BOATS.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be requested to inquire into the expediency of so amending an act entitled "An act for the better security of the lives of passengers on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam," as to exclude steam ferry-boats from the operation thereof, so as to obviate the injury and detriment that have been occasioned to the owners of such boats, by including them within the regulations and requirements of such law. Also, to provide for the release of such ferry-boats as may have been seized under the provisions of such law, and dismiss all legal proceedings instituted against them, and repay all fines and penalties that may have been assessed or decreed against the owners of such boats for the violation of the provisions of said act; and to provide that the law shall hereafter be construed, as originally intended, not to apply to steam ferry-boats.

IOWA LAND BILL.

The engrossed bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State, was read a third time. On the question "Shall the bill pass?" the yeas and nays were demanded by Mr. BRODHEAD, and resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Adams, Badger, Bell, Borland, Brooke, Cass, Clemens, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mangum, Morton, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Underwood, Walker, and Weller—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bradbury, Brodhead, Chase, Hamlin, Mason, Norris, Pratt, and Wade—10.

WILLIAM SPEIDEN.

Mr. BADGER. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to ask the Senate to take up this morning, and dispose of, the bill on the private Calendar, for the relief of purser William Speiden. The reason for asking it is this: in the belief of the committee, this is a very plain case, in which the relief desired should be extended to the party. He has been ordered to sea, and expects soon to leave the United States, to be absent perhaps several years; and if the relief is to be extended to him at all, it ought to be before he goes away. I move to take up that bill; but if any unexpected difficulty should arise, of course it can be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly read a second time, and was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow to William Speiden two and a half per cent. upon the amount of military contributions received by him, while acting as purser to the United States frigate Congress, and as paymaster and commissary to the land forces on the coast of the Pacific, during the Mexican war—to be in full compensation for all extra services, expenses, and losses sustained by him during that period, according to the spirit of the act of March 3, 1849, to provide for the settlement of accounts of public officers and others, who may have received moneys arising from military contributions or otherwise in Mexico.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was subsequently read a third time and passed.

STATUTES AT LARGE.

Mr. BRADBURY. I move to take up the joint resolution authorizing the purchase of the ninth volume of the Laws of the United States. I stated yesterday the reasons which required the early passage of this resolution; but I am desired by a Senator who was not here yesterday to recapitulate the reasons why action on this resolution is necessary. It provides for the purchase of the ninth volume of the Laws of the United States for distribution, in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 8, 1846. The destruction of the Library by fire deprived the members of the House of Representatives of the use of the volumes of the laws which were there. There is need of this volume now, for the accommodation of the committees of the House; and this volume is also needed for distribution, under the provisions of that act, to the heads of departments, and foreign Governments. I hope there will be no objection to taking up the resolution.

The motion was agreed to, and the joint resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of State, in compliance with his request made to the Committee on the Judiciary, to purchase of the publishers of the Statutes of the United States one thousand copies of the ninth volume of the Statutes at Large now published, and to cause them to be distributed as the first and eighth volumes were distributed by the act of August 8, 1846.

Mr. BRADBURY. I beg leave to read a communication addressed by the Secretary of State to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, }
WASHINGTON, January 15, 1852. }

SIR: I beg leave, through you, respectfully to call the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary to the propriety of authorizing this Department to purchase one thousand copies of the ninth volume United Statutes at Large—Little & Brown's edition—for distribution in the same manner as were the one thousand copies of the first eight volumes, under the act of August 8, 1846.

There appears to be a necessity for this purchase, from the fact that the index to the Statutes at Large, just published, and intrusted by the Senate to this Department for distribution, embraces the contents of the ninth volume, not in its serial or pamphlet form, but as a complete and distinct volume, corresponding with those previously published by authority of Congress.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Hon. A. P. BUTLER,
Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

The price which is fixed by the publishers of this volume is regarded as a very reasonable one, considering the manner in which it is got up and its size. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS—NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. BRADBURY. Before proceeding to the consideration of the special order of the day, I desire to call the attention of the Senate again to the bill providing indemnity to sufferers by French spoliation. I do not propose to take it up to-day, but I desire that some day may be designated when it may come up. It was made the special order for a day, more than a month ago. The Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FELCH,] I understand, desires to address the Senate on the subject. I hope we may fix on some day this week for its consideration; and I hope we will name the day now, in order that it may be understood when the bill is to come up. I hope it will not be postponed beyond this week, or at furthest not beyond Monday next.

Mr. CLARKE. I would beg leave to ask whether the honorable Senator from Michigan will be ready to-morrow to submit his remarks to the Senate? There is nothing very special after the consideration of these non-intervention resolutions to-day. Will the Senator be ready to speak, if this bill shall be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FELCH. I was a member of the special committee to which this matter was referred, and being so unfortunate as to be in the minority of the committee in my views on it, I proposed to give the matter a full investigation, and to present some views to the Senate, when the question shall come up for consideration. I had commenced an examination of that kind. The papers and documents referred to in the case are very voluminous, and it is a labor of weeks to go through them. I have not been able as yet to pursue that examination on account of illness during the last two weeks. I shall now, perhaps, be ready to pursue it, and to consent to the matter coming up in a very short time. If the Senator will permit the matter to lie over, say for a week, it will accommodate me better than a shorter time. If, however, I should be able to conclude my investigation sooner, I would consent to its being taken up at an earlier day.

Mr. CLARKE. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the special order of the day.

Mr. MANGUM. The honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] has the floor upon the special order, but the condition of the Senate Chamber is such that it is impossible that he can speak to-day; and I think it is due to him, as he is now, for the first time, about to address the Senate at length, that the Senate should give him a fairer opportunity of being heard. With that view, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BRADBURY asked for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. CASS. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from North Carolina that there can be no sort of objection to allowing this matter to lie over, to accommodate the honorable Senator from Tennessee; but there is no reason why we should adjourn.

Mr. MANGUM. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and move that the special order be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator, probably, is not aware of the order in which the special orders come up. The Chair will call them over, so that the Senator may see. The first is a bill to improve the navigation of the Upper Mississippi.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am much obliged to the honorable Senator from North Carolina for the suggestion which he has made on my behalf. It must be obvious to every Senator here that the room is uncomfortable. But, so far as I am concerned, if it is the pleasure of the Senate, I am willing to go on to-day. I feel that the Chamber is uncomfortable; yet if Senators prefer that the debate should go on now, I am ready, and I submit the question to the Senate. It is a matter of very great indifference to me. If the Senate wish me to proceed now, I can probably say what I have to say, as well to-day as at any other time.

Mr. ATCHISON. Although the Senator from Tennessee expresses entire indifference as to whether he shall go on now or not, I presume that the honorable Senator from North Carolina had some authority for saying that the Senator from Tennessee would prefer to go on to-morrow.

Mr. MANGUM. I do not suppose that any gentleman would like to speak at length to-day.

Mr. ATCHISON. Certainly; and I am ready, as I presume every Senator is ready, to accord this indulgence to the Senator from Tennessee. I therefore move to postpone all the special and general orders prior to the bill granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Hannibal to St. Joseph, in said State.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN MISSOURI.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Hannibal to St. Joseph, in said State, which was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment in the shape of a substitute, which the committee has adopted as a uniform bill for all such purposes.

On the motion of Mr. GEYER, several verbal amendments were made in the substitute; also, amendments to make it conform to the Iowa land bill, which this morning was read a third time and passed. An amendment was also made, on his motion, by which two several bills were incorporated into one, so that this bill not only makes provision for a railroad from Hannibal to St. Joseph, but also for a railroad from St. Louis to the western boundary of the State of Missouri.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri, that in the proviso of the committee's amendment, the same amendment should be inserted which was made to the Iowa bill yesterday; and I therefore make the motion to strike out the words "provided that the right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet on each side of the line of said roads, and a copy of the survey," and insert the following:

"Provided, That in locating the railroads aforesaid, and assigning the limits to the easement, no more lands shall be taken from the United States than is necessary for a convenient construction and use of said roads or public ways, for transportation, including stations, with the usual buildings of all kinds, turn-outs, and such other appurtenances as are usually enjoyed by railroad companies, and a copy of the location."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that an amendment to the Iowa bill was made to insert the words "to be recorded," at the end of that proviso, so as to make it read, that "A copy of the survey of said road, under the direction of said State, shall be forwarded to the proper local land officers respectively, and to the General Land Office, at Washington city, within ninety days after the completion of the same, to be recorded."

It would be proper to make that amendment to this bill.

The suggestion was adopted, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. Before the bill is reported to the Senate, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri what number of acres of land is appropriated by this bill, and what portion of the land will be found to be alternate sections on each side of the road?

Mr. ATCHISON. The Senator from Maine makes an inquiry. He wants to know the quantity of land which is to be appropriated by this bill for these railroads. I am told that upon the Northern Railroad—from Hannibal to St. Joseph—there cannot be obtained, within the fifteen miles of that road, exceeding one half million of acres, and refuse land at that. The road is to be two hundred miles in length—or one hundred and eighty upon a direct line, though it is supposed that with the necessary curves it will be about two hundred miles. As to the road on the south side of the river, my colleague can, perhaps, give more information than I can; but I am told that it will not exceed two hundred and twenty-five miles, with alternate sections on each side. The Senator can make the estimate himself. I have not made a calculation of the exact number of acres.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would inquire further, whether any arrangements have been made by the State, by which this land is immediately to pass into the hands of railroad companies or speculators?

Mr. ATCHISON. No, sir. Each of these roads has a charter from the State of Missouri. That State has appropriated $3,000,000 to assist in the construction of the roads. Private stock upon one of them, I am told, has been taken to the amount of $1,200,000, and upon the other, from $800,000 to $1,000,000. The State of Missouri, I believe, has made no disposition of the lands, for we have always considered it a doubtful matter, whether the Government of the United States would grant anything, even the right of way. She has made no disposition of lands to be granted, as far as my knowledge extends, to railroad companies, or otherwise, for the construction of these roads.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendments were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

CUMBERLAND DAM.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to ask the Senate to take up and act upon a bill, which I propose they shall decide without any argument on my part. It is a bill for the improvement of the Cumberland dam in the Ohio river. It was laid upon the table at a very early period of the session; and I would just remark, that if Congress or the Senate intend to appropriate any money for that object, it is high time that it should be done, so that the Executive may be making arrangements to have the work go on before the warm season commences. It is a measure which has been discussed time and again in this body, and I do not propose now to resume the discussion upon it. I hope the Senate will take it up, and give a silent vote, one way or the other, without any discussion, unless some gentleman is anxious to be heard upon it.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to inquire of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] whether this bill relates to an improvement in the Ohio river, with respect to which there has been very serious disagreement among those who navigate that river, as to the propriety of the improvement, and what the location is?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a dam which was put in the Ohio river by the action of this Government, just above Cumberland Island, so as to throw the water into a chute next to Smithville. It is now in such a situation that it must be either removed or repaired.

Mr. CHASE. There is a very great diversity of opinion with regard to the propriety of that repair, as I know very well from conversation with persons engaged in navigation upon that river.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on taking up the bill.

Mr. CHASE. I hope it will not be taken up at the present time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why not take it up, and let the gentleman assign his reasons for opposing the bill now? We can as well appropriate this afternoon to that object, as any other. This is a matter of pressing importance if anything is to be done at all. If we do anything, now is the time to do it, because the season is coming on when everything should be ready for the work. If you postpone the matter till June or July, the best part of the season will have passed away before anything can be done. It is a matter of some urgency that we should act upon it now.

Mr. CHASE. I should have no objection to taking up the bill now, but that we all came here this morning expecting that a different subject would be taken up, and supposing the usual time of the Senate would be occupied by another question. I wish for a little time to look at the reports that have been made concerning this subject. I am not certain that I shall oppose the passage of the bill, but I wish for an opportunity of informing myself more fully with regard to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well, then, let it pass. I withdraw my motion.

RAILROADS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. BORLAND. As I do not think there is any other business pressing upon the attention of the Senate, I will ask that we take up the bill granting lands to the State of Arkansas for the same purpose as those granted in the bill which passed for the State of Missouri to-day, and that which passed for the State of Iowa yesterday. It is a bill of precisely the same character, resting on precisely the same principles, and I think it might be acted upon to-day as well as at any other time.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly proceeded to consider the bill granting to the State of Arkansas the right of way and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of the Arkansas Central Railroad, from a point on the western bank of the Mississippi river, opposite the town of Memphis, Tennessee, by the way of Little Rock, to a point on Red river, on the border of Texas.

The Committee on Public Lands had reported the original bill, with the model substitute, as in other similar cases.

On the motion of Mr. BORLAND, the bill was amended to make it conform to the bills as amended granting land for like purposes to the States of Iowa and Missouri.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas the same question, in relation to this bill, which I asked in relation to the Missouri bill; namely, what number of acres of land this bill proposes to appropriate? And, in the same connection, I would like to have the Senator inform the Senate, how many millions of acres of land were granted to the State of Arkansas last session?

Mr. BORLAND. I have not made any estimate of the number of acres granted to the State of Arkansas by this bill. The road runs from the Mississippi river, through the centre of the State, to the western frontier. The State is about three hundred miles in width, from east to west. The grant applies to land for six miles on each side of the road, giving the alternate sections. The estimate I have not made; it is not material that it should be made. I have not deemed it necessary, and therefore I have not sat down to make the calculation. I would say that along the line of the road a large portion of the land is in the hands of proprietors, so that perhaps not more than half will be given along the line of the road within the six miles.

With regard to the question as to the amount of swamp land granted to Arkansas, I will say, that it is impossible to tell the amount, because the selections have not been made. But even if they were made, and amounted to millions, I would say, that they are not worth anything at all, until the State has expended all that she can ever receive for them, in converting them into good land.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, and the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, were concurred in. It was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

RAILROAD IN ALABAMA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill, granting to the State of Alabama, the right of way, and a donation of public land, for making a railroad from Selma to the Tennessee river.

This bill was of the same character as the bills making grants of land for similar purposes, in the States of Iowa, Missouri, and Arkansas, and the several amendments adopted in regard to these bills, were incorporated in this bill. It was reported to the Senate, the several amendments were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NAVAL HOSPITAL AT NEW YORK.

Mr. BADGER. I ask the Senate to take up a joint resolution, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the purpose of disposing of it at this time. It is a joint resolution, authorizing the straightening of the boundary lines of the naval hospital at New York. We passed a resolution some time ago; and, in consequence of it, some difficulty arose, which renders this resolution necessary. I move to postpone the previous orders to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the resolution was considered by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was read. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Navy, on the part of the United States, to carry into full effect an arrangement made with the coterminous proprietors, whereby a certain part of the eastern boundary of the lands of the naval hospital at New York is straightened, as will appear by reference to a map, signed by the said proprietors and the commissioners for running the said line on the 28th of November, 1848, and approved by the Secretary of the Navy, on the 18th of December, in the same year, so that without any pecuniary consideration from the one to the other, the slips of land on the south and west sides of said line according to said plan shall become the property of the United States, and so much on the other side as now belongs to the United States, shall become the property of the abutting proprietors respectively.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to hear an explanation from some gentleman who is on the committee which reported this bill, as to whether it is to involve any considerable expenditure in the purchase of lands.

Mr. BADGER. If the Senator from Maine had listened to the resolution when read, he would have learned that it does not involve the expenditure of a single cent. The boundary is irregular, and the object is to make a straight line, and to make an exchange of small slips of land.

No amendment being offered, the resolution was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SELECTION OF LANDS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. WALKER. Very early in the session I introduced a bill to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which that State is entitled, under the act of the 8th August, 1846, to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers. I desire that it may be taken up. I would not now make the motion but that our Legislature is in session, and if the bill is passed it will be necessary that it should be passed soon, in order to enable the Legislature to take some action on the subject at the present session. It is just such a bill as has been passed for the State of Illinois, and I hope there is not to be any distinction made between the two States.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. The bill is reported with an amendment. The committee propose to strike out these words:

"That the Governor of the State of Wisconsin shall be, and he is hereby authorized to select the balance of the land to which the State is entitled under the provisions of the act of 8th of August, 1846, to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, out of any of the unsold and unappropriated lands in the State."

And to substitute these words:

"That the Governor of the State of Wisconsin shall be, and he is hereby authorized to select, out of any unsold and unappropriated lands in that State, the balance of the land to which that State is entitled under the provisions of the act of 8th August, 1846, within the limits of the grant of land, to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, which could not be assigned to the State under the provisions of said act, in consequence of the same having been previously sold or otherwise disposed of."

Mr. BADGER. There is a slight verbal amendment which I would suggest; which is to strike out the word "balance," and insert the word "residue."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, the amendments were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT PORTLAND.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate take up the bill making an appropriation for the erection of a marine hospital at Portland, Maine. I think it is a bill which will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate. It will stand on its own merits.

Mr. BORLAND. That bill asks for an appropriation for building or continuing a marine hospital. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Maine, whether there is any reason why a different course should be pursued in regard to that bill than is pursued in regard to appropriations for other purposes? I know that heretofore appropriations for marine hospitals have been included in the general appropriation bills, and I recollect that on one occasion a long discussion occurred on a motion to strike out a similar appropriation from the general appropriation bill. Now, I wish to know the reason why a difference should be made in this case?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have stated that I was willing to let this bill stand upon its own merits, and not to have it depending on the general appropriation bill to bring it through. The only difference that I know of is, that I propose to bring it up and pass it in a bill by itself; and I do not know why it should not commend itself to the good sense of the Senate, because I am willing to trust it to its own merits. The other course named by the Senator was irregular. This is the correct and parliamentary course.

Mr. BADGER. I can suggest another reason, in addition to that suggested by the Senator from Maine, why it is proper that this bill should be acted upon now. I doubt whether the motion could be made to insert this bill in the general appropriation bill, unless the sense of the Senate had been taken upon it, under the restrictive rule which we adopted last session.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone the previous orders to take up the bill, and it was agreed to.

The bill was then read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to purchase a suitable site in Portland, in the State of Maine, or in such place in the immediate vicinity thereof as he shall deem proper, and to cause to be erected thereon, under his direction, a marine hospital for the relief of sick and disabled seamen; and for that purpose the sum of $30,000 is appropriated.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would ask for the reading of the report which accompanies the bill, but that I think I can state the facts more succinctly than they are set forth in that report, and what will be satisfactory to the Senate. There has never been a marine hospital north of Boston, though we have a distance of coast of five hundred miles between Boston and the Province of New Brunswick. There are in the State of Maine near forty thousand seamen who at different times follow the sea for a living. We contribute to the seamen's fund somewhere in the neighborhood of $10,000 annually. The severities of our climate and the large number of our seamen, are the facts upon which that report was based, and I think I need not say anything more. I have the facts before me for a full explanation, but I will stop unless some Senator shall desire a further statement.

Mr. BADGER. That is quite enough.

Mr. BORLAND. Lest it may be supposed that I am opposed to the passage of this bill, in consequence of the inquiry I made, I rise to say that I cordially approve of it, and only wished to know whether there was any difference between this bill and those which have formerly been passed on this subject. Among the first things which I did when I came here, was to ask for an appropriation for the erection of a similar hospital in my own State. I then went into an estimate of the amount which was held by the Government of the vast sums of money taken from seamen, which I held ought to be appropriated liberally for this and similar purposes.

The Senator from Maine says there are near forty thousand seamen in Maine. I say, then, that I think they are entitled to $100,000 a year; for they each pay $2 40 a year into the Treasury, not by a tax, but it is paid out of their wages, being twenty cents per month. And it is no matter what kind of a vessel or craft they go upon, even if it is a raft, each man so employed has deducted from his wages $2 40 a year, so that these forty thousand seamen in Maine are entitled to $100,000 per annum.

Mr. HAMLIN. I did not understand the inquiry made by the Senator from Arkansas as being dictated by a spirit of opposition, and if, from the manner in which I replied to him, he supposed that I did, he is entirely mistaken. The Senator from Arkansas will recollect that all persons in Maine who are seamen, do not follow the sea all the time, or at the same time; perhaps not one half. Besides, the amount of money contributed by the seamen of Maine, is paid mostly in other States. The seaman is entitled to relief wherever he may be. For that purpose these hospitals are erected all over the country, which are designed to furnish that very relief.

Mr. FELCH. I would inquire whether the $30,000 is for the purchase of grounds, or whether this is the commencement of an operation which is to be carried out by further appropriations? I would like to know whether there is to be any limit to this appropriation?

Mr. BADGER. It will certainly require further appropriations.

Mr. HAMLIN. The bill, Mr. President, has no limitation, nor do I think it should have any. It may be that $30,000 will be found sufficient to complete the whole work, but it is hardly advisable to restrict it to that sum, for we shall then have but one single marine hospital north of Boston, and it should be made to accommodate a large number of persons. Let the matter be subject to the direction of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BADGER. If there be any doubt about the sum, you had better make it $50,000 instead of $30,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. No, no; let it go at $30,000.

Mr. STOCKTON. I move to amend the bill by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifty," so as to make the sum $50,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me, I will ask him to withdraw that amendment. I know the feelings which prompt him to offer it; but the Department has suggested that $30,000 should be applied for, and I think it would be better to adhere to that sum. Let a further sum be appropriated hereafter when necessary.

Mr. STOCKTON. Well, well; I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BELL. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this bill, but I should like to know from my honorable friend from Maine, why this bill is brought in as a separate measure? Heretofore, when we have established marine hospitals, the appropriations for them have been required to be incorporated in the general appropriation bill. Now, I do not ask this from mere idle curiosity to know the history of this bill, but because I feel myself charged here to do so. There is a strong necessity for something being done for that portion of the country which I represent on this floor—something for the waters of the Mississippi. I think we should have a marine hospital there, where there is not unfrequently a great deal of suffering, and particularly during the last three or four years, when the cholera was prevalent. If gentlemen have not attended to the statements made in the public prints in regard to the suffering which has been endured on these waters, they can have no idea of them, much of which suffering, however, might be alleviated by the establishment of marine hospitals. I have no doubt that this bill is a very proper one; but I want to learn from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether there are not to be other bills, general bills, for the support of hospitals, and whether they propose the establishment of any new hospitals in that general bill. I merely ask this question for information, not that I wish to obstruct the passage of the bill, but to know why this measure is to be passed now, contrary to the custom which has been adopted heretofore.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is now pending in the House—if I may be allowed to refer to that body—as we see by its proceedings, a measure for the relief of sick and disabled seamen. There is annually made, in the appropriation bills, an appropriation of a sum certain for that purpose, over and above the sum which arises from the payment of twenty cents per month from the seamen's wages. This bill has nothing to do with that. It is a bill for the erection of a hospital, not one making an appropriation for sick and disabled seamen, otherwise than erecting for them in Maine, where there is no hospital, a seamen's home. The subject-matter was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and they have reported the bill. There was also a memorial referred to that committee, for another hospital in the State of Louisiana. On that they have reported, or directed the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] to report, a bill. We have not sought to incur the one bill by the other. While it is true, as I have stated, that many of our hospitals have been erected by attaching a specific appropriation to our appropriation bills, still, I think it is no objection to this bill that we seek for its passage in the ordinary way of doing legislative business, trusting to its own intrinsic merits for a favorable action of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I suggested to my friend from Maine, that there was a separate reason why this bill should receive the support of the Senate. If gentlemen will attend to the alteration which was made, at the last Congress, in the rules of the Senate, in respect to the general appropriation bills, they will see the extreme importance of its being passed; for if a general appropriation bill should come here, and the Senate should not have passed this bill, or a resolution declaring the propriety of it, this appropriation could not be moved as an amendment to it. The 30th rule of the Senate is as follows:

"No amendment, proposing an additional appropriation, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act, or resolution, previously passed by the Senate during that session;" &c.

Now, if the Senate pass this law, although it should not be reached in the House, it will then be competent to move this appropriation in the general appropriation bills.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS.

Mr. BRADBURY. Before the Senate adjourns, I desire to come to an understanding as to when the French spoliation bill shall be considered. If some day next week—Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday—can be designated, and we can have an understanding upon the subject, I intend not to press the Senate to consider it before that time. I hope some day will be named when, by common consent, we can take it up.

Mr. BADGER. I shall be extremely glad to have some day named when we can consider this bill; but I must say to the Senator, that the bill which has been reported from the Naval Committee for the establishment of a dry dock and navy-yard in California, we of the Naval Committee think is entitled to the consideration of the Senate before the bill to which he alludes. After that shall have been disposed of, I shall join with him to take up his bill.

Mr. BRADBURY. I will name Wednesday for the consideration of the French spoliation bill.

Mr. BADGER. Oh, no.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Senator from California [Mr. GWIN] says he has no objection to agreeing to that day.

Mr. BADGER. If he has no objection to it, I have not.

Mr. BRADBURY. If it is the common understanding that the bill will be taken up on that day, I am satisfied.

Mr. GWIN. On Monday we can take up the Calendar, and the bill to which the Senator from North Carolina alludes stands first upon it. If we do so, as I hope we shall, of course that bill will come up first for consideration.

Mr. FELCH. I do not wish to delay action upon the French spoliation bill; but if the Senate will set apart Monday of the week after next for its consideration, it will suit me much better than any other time. I am sure there are other bills which will require the attention of the Senate, and occupy their whole time, until that day. I therefore suggest Monday of the week after next.

Mr. BRADBURY. When the subject was before the select committee, the making of the report was delayed some time for the accommodation of my friend from Michigan. The publication of the report was then delayed. At the time for calling it up for consideration, it was again postponed until February 16th, at the Senator's request. It has already been postponed some two or three times. I trust, therefore, the Senate will consent to have it considered on Wednesday next.

The PRESIDENT. There is no motion before the Senate.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 17, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. PEASLEE. There are, Mr. Speaker, upon your table, a number of communications from the Executive departments, which it is important should be referred to some of the committees. I hope the House will unanimously consent that they shall be taken up and referred; it will occupy a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] on yesterday, to close debate upon the deficiency bill. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks the unanimous consent of the House to submit a motion that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, so far as communications from the Departments are concerned.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will state, for the information of the House, that whenever it is the pleasure of the House to receive the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill providing for the assignability of land warrants, they are ready to report.

MEMBERS. Let us have it now.

Mr. HOUSTON. I apprehend that the report of the conference committee, when made, will create considerable debate, and I therefore feel it to be my duty to object, if that objection will prevent its reception at present.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. PEASLEE] submits a motion that, by the unanimous consent of the House, the communications from Departments upon the Speaker's table be taken up, read, and referred to the proper committees.

Mr. PEASLEE. I appeal to gentlemen to let that be done, as it will occasion no debate. They have been on the Speaker's table for a long time.

Mr. POLK objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the committee of conference, on the bill making bounty land warrants assignable.

Mr. JONES. I will merely remark that there is at least as much interest felt in the country, by that class of people who have received but little of the benefits of the Government, in regard to the land warrant assignment bill, as in the deficiency bill. It will take, I apprehend, but a short time to dispose of the report of the conference.

Mr. HOUSTON. I feel as much interest in the enactment of a law to make land warrants assignable as the gentleman from Tennessee, or any other gentleman upon this floor. I have given my votes all through, without any consumption of time to attain that result. If I understand the condition of the report of the conference committee, it will consume much time in debate, unless the gentleman from Tennessee, after he has submitted the report, calls for the previous question upon it. If he will do that, so that the House may be brought directly to a vote, I will not interpose any objection.

Mr. JONES. I cannot make that promise, because I shall have to explain the report, and others may wish to say something; and I could not be expected to move the previous question. The gentleman, or some one else, can obtain the floor, and call for the previous question.

Mr. STANLY. I object to the introduction of the report, unless the gentleman calls for the previous question after its submission.

Mr. JONES. I cannot promise to do that, if it is not passed from this to the end of the session.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Tennessee will make his explanation, and then move the previous question, I do not think it will be objected to.

Mr. STANLY. To that I will not object.

Mr. JONES. If there be no objection, then I will do so.

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to a question of order. It is, whether the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] having been made at a late hour of the day yesterday, comes up under the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged question; and comes up as the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. FOWLER. I would suggest to the gentleman, and all others, to let that pass until the morning hour has transpired, and to allow committees to make reports, and permit the business upon the Speaker's table to be taken up and referred; then the House can proceed to the business proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again inquires whether the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is objected to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will not object, under the arrangement that the gentleman shall move the previous question after its report shall have been explained.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I object.

QUESTION OF ORDER.

Mr. JONES. I wish to submit a question of order. At what time is it in order for a committee of conference to report? There is nothing in the rules which specifies the time; there is nothing in parliamentary practice which prescribes the time; but I have no recollection, on any occasion, of a report of a committee of conference having been excluded by an objection. It seems to me, from the nature of the case, that it must be at all times in order, because it is business nearest to perfection, and business upon which both Houses are engaged at the same time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect of any instance where objection was made to the introduction of the report of a committee of conference; and there is no rule giving the report of such a committee preference over the report of any other committee.

Mr. JONES. There is no time specified; when will it be in order, then, for them to make a report? I think that they can report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The report will be in order, when reports from committees are called for. The recollection of the Chair is, that the practice of the House will show that reports of committees of conferences have never been objected to, but have been made at any time during the sittings.

Mr. JONES. As there seems to be no settled practice, and no time specified, when a committee of conference can report, I will, for the purpose of determining the question one way or the other, take an appeal to the decision of the Chair. The House can thus decide whether it is in order for them to report whenever they are ready, or not.

Mr. STUART. I do not understand the Chair as deciding that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does decide, being called upon to do so, that the business first in order, is the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, to close the debate upon the deficiency bill. That is the opinion of the Chair. From this decision an appeal is taken.

Mr. HOUSTON. I trust that the gentleman who objected to the acceptance of the report of the committee of conference, will let it be disposed of this morning, in the way suggested, to save time; and that bills, which have been a long time before the House, may be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the House that, but for the pendency of the question submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, the Chair would be strongly inclined to decide, (as the practice, in the opinion of the Chair, has been that way,) that it would be in order for a committee of conference to report at any time. The Chair, however, is free to confess that he knows of no rule that would guide him in this matter; nor has he recollection of a case, during his services here, where objection was made to the report of a committee of conference.

Mr. PHELPS. I will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he withdraw his resolution for the closing of debate upon the deficiency bill, and let us dispose of this report. He can move his resolution again at any time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I dislike to do that, but with the hope that I will be able to get the floor again to move it, I will withdraw my resolution and allow the course suggested to be pursued.

THE REPORT OF THE CONFEREES.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Under the decision of the Chair I then submit the following report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses with regard to the land warrant assignment bill:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses on Senate bill No. 146, entitled "An act to make land warrants assignable and for other purposes," have met the managers on the part of the Senate, and, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses to strike out the word "act" where it first occurs in the third line of the first proviso proposed to the first section of the bill by the House, and insert in lieu thereof the word "laws;" insert after the word "located" in the said third line of said first proviso the words "according to the legal subdivision of the public lands and in one body;" and with these amendments they recommend that the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the first section of the bill.

Strike out all after the word "warrants," in the twelfth line of the second section, to the end of the section; and, with this amendment, they recommend that the House recede from its amendment striking out all of said bill after the first section.

JAMES SHIELDS,
ALPHEUS FELCH,
TRUMAN SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
G. W. JONES,
GEORGE BRIGGS,
GRAHAM N. FITCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. I ask now that the Clerk read the first proviso as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read it, as follows:

Provided, That the warrants which have been, or may hereafter be issued in pursuance of said laws, or of this act, may be located according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands in one body, upon any lands in the United States subject to private entry at the time of such location at the minimum price.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The first amendment proposed by the committee is to strike out the word "act," in the third line of the first proviso of the House, and to insert the word "law" in its stead. That is done for the purpose of making the proviso conform to the first section of the act. The first section of the act provides that land warrants given under the laws of the United States, shall be assignable. That is the only effect of that amendment.

The second amendment to be inserted after the word "located," in the third line of the same proviso, is that the warrant shall be located in one body, and according to the legal subdivision of the United States. This, sir, was thought necessary by most of the committee, if not all, in order to prevent a person holding a one hundred and sixty acre warrant from locating it upon forty acre tracts in four different sections, or one holding an eighty acre warrant from locating it upon two forty acre tracts in different half sections. This is done in order to require the holder of a warrant to locate his one hundred and sixty acre warrant upon one section, and the holder of an eighty acre warrant upon a half section lying in one body. For instance: it is to prevent the locating of an eighty-acre warrant upon the northeast quarter and southeast quarter of the same section, or forty in one section and forty in another. That is the only effect of that; and these amendments met with the unanimous approbation of the conferees on the part of both Houses.

Then we recommend this amendment, that the Senate shall recede from the disagreement to these two provisos proposed by the House to the first amendment of the bill. The only other amendment we propose, is to strike out of the second section of the bill, after the word "warrants," the following:

"Where they have been transferred under the provisions of any act of Congress, and the regulations of the General Land Office; and to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States upon the adjustment of the accounts of such officers, where it will be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the warrant was located by the soldier or warrantee, or his next of kin, as provided for by law."

Mr. MEADE. I should like a further explanation about locating the warrants according to legal subdivision. Suppose the warrant is an eighty-acre warrant, I would ask my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] could that eighty-acre warrant be laid upon the south half of a quarter section, or on the east or west half of the same section?

Mr. JONES. My impression is, and I think this is the universal understanding of the amendment, as proposed by the committee of conference, that you can lay it on the north half, the south half, the east half, or the west half of the section; but that you must take one of the halves laying broadside to each other; that is, that you shall not take one quarter from a corner in the southwest or the other in the southeast, so as to connect them by corners. You may, by legal subdivisions, select either the north, the south, the east, or the west half of a quarter section under an eighty-acre warrant. I do not know that I understand all the regulations about the Land Office, but it is very clear and distinct that the land must be located in one body, and according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands of the United States, subject to private entry. I understand from some of the gentlemen around me from the new States, that, according to legal subdivisions, they cannot take the north half or the south half of a quarter section with an eighty-acre tract, but that it must be either the east half or the west half under the decisions and regulations of the Department. However that may be, it is according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands in one body; and I think that will be found to be correct. As to the other amendment, the House will recollect, that by the second section of the Senate bill, they proposed to pay to the registers and receivers the same fees for locating all military bounty land warrants of every description that they would be entitled to if the same tract of land were entered and the money paid for it, estimating the warrant at $1 25 per acre; that is, one per cent. upon the amount to each of these officers.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment? I find it impossible to keep up with the gentleman's explanations, and understand them from the method which he pursues now. I would suggest to him, that he will permit the several sections to be read as he comments upon them. It is important to us all that we should understand what he means; but we cannot follow him in this way.

Mr. JONES. It is only one amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not understand what this amendment is.

Mr. JONES. The Clerk will read the second section of the bill.

The second was then read, as below. The part in italics is proposed by the conference committee to be stricken out:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the registers and receivers of the land offices, shall hereafter be severally authorized to charge and receive for their services in locating all military bounty land warrants, issued since the eleventh day of February, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, the same compensation or percentage to which they are entitled by law for sales of the public lands for cash, at the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; the said compensation to be hereafter paid by the assignees or holders of such warrants, where they have been transferred under the provisions of an act of Congress, and the regulations of the General Land Office; and to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States upon the adjustment of the accounts of said officers, where it shall be shown, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that the warrant was located by the soldier or warrantee, or his next of kin, as provided for by law.

Mr. JONES. That is the only amendment which the committee of conference propose to make to that portion of the Senate bill which was stricken out by the House. The second section of the Senate bill, as it came here, proposed to give to the registers and receivers, each, the same fees that they were entitled to if the land should be entered and paid for with money. The latter branch of it proposes that when the warrant shall be located by the original warrantee, the soldier or his legal representatives, then it shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. This amendment proposes to strike out that part which requires that the fees after locating to be paid out of the Treasury, and requires the locator, whether the original holder or the assignee of the warrant, in all cases hereafter to pay the fees himself. I concurred with the committee of conference in striking out this part, and requiring the locators to pay the fees themselves; but I did not concur in that part of the amendment fixing the fees, because I think the fees are too large. They will be fifty cents to each officer, or, rather, one dollar for the location of a forty acre warrant, and two dollars for the location of an eighty acre warrant, and four dollars for the location of a one hundred and sixty acre warrant, or two dollars to each of the officers; when the labor for the forty acre warrant is exactly the same as that for the one hundred and sixty acre warrant. Then I concur in striking out that part which made the fees a tax upon the Treasury, and would have occurred in the balance of it, if the fees had not been as large as they are.

By the third section of the Senate bill, it is proposed to pay to the registers and receivers who have gone out of office, as well as those who are now in office, the same fees for the location of warrants heretofore located, as they would have been entitled to if the land had been entered, and the money paid for it. I was opposed to this section. We cannot tell exactly what will be the cost upon the Treasury. But there have been seventy-five thousand one hundred and sixty acre warrants issued under the act of February, 1847, and upwards of six thousand forty acre warrants, making the aggregate amount of lands under that law something over 12,000,000 acres. There will also be some five or ten thousand warrants more issued under that law. What proportion of these warrants have been located, it is impossible for any of us to tell at this time. But suppose that the whole of them have been located, then the fees or commissions upon them, according to this law, would be $302,304; one fourth upon the one hundred and sixty acre warrants, and one half upon the forty acre warrants having been paid by the locators of the warrant, except where the original warrantee located himself. None of those fees have been paid, and they are all to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will state that out of the whole number of warrants issued under the Mexican bounty land law, something like seventy-five thousand, there have been located only six thousand by assignees.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Does the gentleman pretend to say that seventy-five thousand are all that have been issued?

Mr. DUNHAM. I say about that number has been located under the Mexican bounty land law. Sixty-six thousand of these land warrants were located by the original grantees of the warrants, and upon that number you have not to pay the full value, as provided for by this law. I have documents to show it.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I should like to see the documents.

Mr. DUNHAM. I have exhibited this document before this House repeatedly, as certified by the Land Office. It happens to be in my room now. Members of this House will recollect, that a few days ago, when this matter was under discussion, I held it up, and exhibited it to the House as certified by the Department.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to make an inquiry. It is very difficult indeed for me, almost impossible, to understand these amendments. I would suggest, whether the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] would not give way to a motion, if a motion be proper, that the report be printed, with all the amendments, so that we may understand them?

Mr. JONES. This whole thing is confined in a nut-shell. The whole proposition of the committee of conference now is, that the registers and receivers shall receive the same fees that they are entitled to under the law when the money is paid for the lands, estimating the warrants at $1 25 per acre. The fees upon warrants that shall be located after the passage of this law, to be paid by the locator, and the fees which have accrued upon warrants heretofore located, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The proposition pays the fees prospectively and retrospectively; those prospectively, to be paid by the locators, and those paid retrospectively, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. From the best estimate I can make, it will take somewhere about $200,000 to pay these retrospective fees. The House has the question before them, and it is for them to decide it. I have thought it was necessary for me to make this explanation, as my name appears upon that report as one of the committee of conference upon the part of the House; but I shall vote against that part of the report which goes back and pays these fees.

Mr. FITCH. I do not propose to debate this question at length, because the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is anxious that the previous question should be asked. I wish to touch upon a few points embraced in the report of the committee of conference, which were not alluded to, or but briefly, by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

Here there was great noise and confusion in the Hall.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair upon a point of order:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAMPBELL] rose first and addressed the Chair.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I desire to move an adjournment, if it is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama cannot obtain the floor for that purpose, while the gentleman from Indiana is upon it.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will yield the floor for that motion. We cannot do any business, there is so much confusion, and we had, therefore, much better adjourn.

Mr. FITCH. I cannot yield the floor for that motion; but the gentleman from Illinois, I understand, desires to ask a question in relation to the action of the committee of conference, and I am of course perfectly willing to yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I desire to be informed in regard to one point made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] I understood that gentleman to state that the bill, as now reported, will only permit the location of a warrant to be made in the same section, according to the legal subdivision.

Mr. JONES. The amendment says, "according to the legal sub-division of the public lands."

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understood, from the explanation of the gentleman from Tennessee, that a party having a warrant of one hundred and sixty acres, could not, under this bill, locate eighty acres in one section, and eighty acres in the adjoining section, both lying together. Now, if that is the effect of the bill, I am opposed to it.

Mr. FITCH. The gentleman's knowledge of the manner in which the public lands are divided and sub-divided, should have taught him at once that the amendment adopted by the committee of conference does not warrant such a supposition as that. It merely compels the locator to take his eighty acres in a compact body. He cannot select two lots of forty acres that corner with each other, or that are not contiguous to each other.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make a brief explanation in relation to an error, into which I fell in my remarks this morning, in reference to the number of Mexican bounty land warrants that have been located by assignees.

Mr. FITCH. I cannot; I have been interrupted quite enough already; and, moreover, as I saw the gentleman's error—doubtless an unintentional one—I can correct it as well as himself.

[Here some conversation of a personal nature took place between Messrs. DUNHAM and FITCH; but owing to the confusion prevailing in the Hall, the reporters were unable to hear a word of it.]

Mr. FITCH, (resuming.) It will be borne in mind by the House, that when the Senate bill was before us, we amended the first section. But first, in order to make that amendment intelligible to new members, it is necessary to go back to the proceedings of the last Congress. It is well known that during the last Congress, when the bounty land law of 1850 was under discussion here, an attempt was made by a gentleman, then a Representative from Ohio, [Mr. VINTON,] to so change the law, as that the warrants issued under it should be located only on land then in the market, and not upon land hereafter to come into the market. The House voted down that amendment by an overwhelming majority; but subsequently, at the very heel of the session, a few minutes before the adjournment, the same gentleman inserted in the Civil and Diplomatic appropriation bill, or in some other of the appropriation bills, an amendment to that effect. He did it at a time when we could not vote on the amendment without risking the loss of the appropriation bill, and, consequently, he succeeded in forcing on this House a provision which the House had previously condemned by an overwhelming majority. The amendment of the House to the Senate bill now under discussion, repeals that provision of the law of 1850, and provides that the warrants may be located on any land in the market; provided, that if the lands are subject to entry at more than the minimum price, the locator shall pay the difference between $1 25 per acre (the presumed value of the warrant) and the cash value of the land. For instance, if the lands are sold at $2 50 per acre, the locator shall pay $1 25 per acre, in cash. The Senate committee were apparently determined that this amendment of the House should not be in the bill; but they finally receded from their disagreement to it, on condition that the House committee should recede from the House amendment, striking out the other sections of the bill, which, from my previous course in the House, it may well be presumed I could have no difficulty in complying with. We consequently recommended, as the gentleman from Tennessee has said, that the Senate shall recede from their disagreement to our amendment to the first section, and that we shall recede from our amendment, striking out the entire Senate bill with the exception of the first section.

The second section of the bill originally provided for the payment of fees to registers and receivers out of the Treasury of the United States, for any warrants hereafter located by the parties to whom the warrants were issued; but if located by an assignee, the fees were to be paid by the locator. The committee have so amended this section as to make the fees payable by the holder of the warrant in all cases, whether he be the original holder or an assignee. The remaining sections of the bill are well understood, as they were in the Senate bill. Relative to the statistics of the gentleman from Tennessee and of my colleague, I have little to say. They may, or they may not be correct; but I presume as the gentlemen have probably taken some pains to inform themselves on the subject, that they at least think them correct.

I differ with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] in his estimate of the amount which the third section will take from the Treasury. He puts it at $200,000. I do not believe it will be the half of that; and I have the estimate of a gentleman, who knows more of the matter than does my friend from Tennessee or myself, to sustain my opinion. It is an estimate from a source from whence any opinion relative to our public lands will be received by the country as authority. The error of my colleague, [Mr. DUNHAM,] which, as I have before said, was without doubt unintentional, consisted in stating that of some seventy thousand warrants issued under the Mexican war bounty land law, some sixty-six thousand had been located by the soldiers, the original holders, and that upon this number the fees were to be paid out of the United States Treasury, by the third section of this bill; and that only about six thousand of the seventy-two thousand had been located by assignees, and the fees paid. The exact reverse of this statement is the fact. Of the seventy-two thousand, sixty-six thousand have been located by assignees, and the fees, provided for by the old law, paid; and only six thousand by the soldiers, the fees for which are, by this bill, to be paid out of the Treasury.

The gentleman from Tennessee informed the committee that he should vote against the provision for the payment of registers and receivers, because he thought it too high; but with that single exception, the committee were unanimous in their report, and I hope it will be acceded to by both Houses.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the previous question.

Mr. NABERS. I hope the gentleman will not call the previous question. I am satisfied the House cannot vote intelligibly on this report. I cannot for one.

Mr. HOUSTON. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. JONES. I will not withdraw it, and it will then be under the control of the majority of the House.

Mr. NABERS. Will not the gentleman from Tennessee postpone this matter to some future time? I only desire to be able to vote intelligibly. That is all I have to say.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would inquire of the Chair if the morning hour has not expired? If so, we can go into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and this matter will come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the morning hour is not affected at all by this report, and, therefore, that it has not yet commenced.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is very desirable that these amendments should be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no objection whatever to the postponement of the matter till to-morrow morning. But I want to get rid of it, and I think the House does.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to get rid of it, too.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw the call for the previous question?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to know if a motion to postpone this report until to-morrow morning, or the day after, would be in order now? If so, I will make that motion for the purpose of having the amendments printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that that motion would not be in order during the pendency of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. The previous question has not been sustained.

The SPEAKER. But it has been demanded.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order, as to how the House will have to vote on this report? I believe that the report is an entirety, and that the only vote the House can take is on agreeing to it, or disagreeing to it. The House is not brought to vote on the separate propositions contained in the report, but on the whole report as it stands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, for the information of the House, that his decision will be, in accordance with the view taken by the gentleman from Virginia, that the vote of the House will be on the report of the committee as it stands.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, if we now go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, this matter will not come up to-morrow morning? If we do that, in the mean time the amendments will be printed in the Globe, and we can all read them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this report would come up, except at a time when a privileged question or motion was pending.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

during the pendency of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I ask the House, by unanimous consent, to let this report go over till to-morrow morning.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. ORR. I desire to propound an inquiry to the Chair. If the House refuses to concur in the report of the committee of conference will it then be in order to move to raise another committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, in extraordinary cases, such a committee has been raised.

Several MEMBERS. "Always!" "Always!"

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not very certain in his recollection of the practice of the House.

Mr. ORR. I would suggest that all we have to do is to move that the House non-concur with the report of the committee, and let another committee of conference be appointed.

The SPEAKER. No other proposition can be entertained during the pendency of the previous question.

The House was then divided upon seconding the call for the previous question, and there were—ayes 62, noes 60.

Tellers were demanded.

Mr. ORR. If the Chair will allow me to make a statement in regard to this matter, perhaps it will save the necessity of ordering tellers upon the question. I will suggest that it is of no avail to discuss this report. The House cannot possibly amend it in any way. We must pass it as it is, or we must reject it. Now I hope the House will reject that report at once, and allow another committee to be appointed.

The House was divided upon the question of ordering tellers; and, only twenty-two gentlemen rising, they were not ordered.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. Is it in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The main question has been ordered, and that must take precedence of all other motions as a privileged question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg to remind the Chair upon this point, that it was decided differently in the last Congress. The Chair will recollect, that during the first session of the last Congress, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Dorr] brought in a bill for the admission of California, disconnected from every other subject. The previous question was sustained upon it, and then a motion was made to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It was decided that a call of the House was not in order, because the previous question had been sustained; but it was also decided that the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole was in order; and the same question has been decided in the same way a dozen times.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would hesitate to differ with his predecessor. In this case, however, his opinion is very clear. He believes that the House, having ordered the main question to be now put, must proceed to execute its own order, and that no other motion can intervene until that is disposed of.

Mr. FITCH. If the motion were now made to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, would not the report then lie over till to-morrow? I desire that it shall lie over, in order that it may be printed.

The SPEAKER. It can only lie over by unanimous consent.

Mr. FITCH. Well, I submit the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put, and I hope there will be no objection to the report then going over till to-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, let's vote upon it now!

Mr. STANLY. I desire to inquire of the Chair, what will be the effect of the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. If the House choose to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put, and then reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded, it will then be competent to move to postpone the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. HOUSTON. The same thing precisely can be done upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ORR. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put, and the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table—ayes 43; noes not counted.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave respectfully to inquire of the Chair, whether—if we reconsider the vote ordering the main question to be put, and we then refuse to order the main question—whether under our rules, it does not go over?

The SPEAKER. It will in that case go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then, I hope there will be no objection to its reconsideration.

The question was then taken, and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on ordering the main question to be put; and, being taken, it was decided in the negative.

So the main question was not ordered to be put.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose the subject now goes over, as a matter of course?

The SPEAKER. It does.

If the report of the committee of conference be agreed to, the bill will read as follows, viz:

Be it enacted, &c., That all warrants for military bounty land, which have been or may hereafter be issued under any law of the United States, and all valid locations of the same, which have been, or may hereafter be made, are hereby declared to be assignable, by deed or instrument of writing, made and executed after the taking effect of this act according to such form, and pursuant to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so as to vest the assignee with all the rights of the original owners of the warrant or location: Provided, That any person entitled to preemption right to any land, shall be entitled to use any such land warrant in payment of the same, at the rate of $1 25 per act, for the quantity of land therein specified: Provided, That the warrants which have been or may hereafter be issued, in pursuance of said laws, or of this act, may be located, according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands in one body, upon any lands of the United States, subject to private entry at the time of such location, at the minimum price: Provided, further, That when said warrants shall be located on lands which are subject to entry at a greater minimum than $1 25 per acre, the locator of said warrants shall pay to the United States in cash the difference between the value of such warrants at $1 25 per acre, and the tract of land located on.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the registers and receivers of the land offices, shall hereafter be severally authorized to charge and receive for their services in locating all military bounty land warrants, issued since the 11th day of February, 1847, the same compensation or per centage to which they are entitled by law for sales of the public lands for cash, at the rate of $1 25 per acre, the said compensation to be hereafter paid by the assignees or holders of such warrants.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That registers and receivers, whether in or out of office at the passage of this act, or their legal representatives in case of death, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States, for services heretofore performed in locating military bounty land warrants, the same rate of compensation provided in the preceding section for services hereafter to be performed, after deducting the amount already received by such officers under the act entitled "An act to require the holders of military land warrants to compensate the land officers of the United States for services in relation to the location of those warrants," approved May 17th, 1848: Provided, That no register or receiver shall receive any compensation out of the Treasury for past services, who has charged and received illegal fees for the location of such warrants: And provided further, That no register or receiver shall receive for his services during any year, a greater compensation than the maximum now allowed by law.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the militia or volunteers or State troops of any State or Territory were called into military service, and whose services have been paid by the United States subsequent to the eighteenth of June, eighteen hundred and twelve, the officers and soldiers of such militia, volunteers, or troops, shall be entitled to all the benefits of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States, approved September twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and fifty, and shall receive lands for their services according to the provisions of said act, upon proof of length of service as therein required; and that the last proviso of the ninth section of the act of eleventh of February, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, be and the same is hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize bounty land to those who have heretofore received or become entitled to the same.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That where any company, battalion, or regiment, in an organized form, marched more than twenty miles to the place where they were mustered into the service of the United States, or were discharged more than twenty miles from the place where such company, battalion, or regiment was organized: in all such cases, in computing the length of service of the officers and soldiers of any such company, battalion, or regiment, with a view to determine the quantity of land, any officer or soldier is entitled to under said act, approved 28th of September, 1850, there shall be allowed one day for every twenty miles from the place where the company, battalion, or regiment was organized, to the place where the same was mustered into the service of the United States; and also one day for every twenty miles from the place where such company, battalion, or regiment was discharged, to the place where it was organized, and from whence it marched, to enter the service.

PROPOSITION TO CLOSE DEBATE.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move the resolution closing debate upon the deficiency bill, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The resolution was then reported, as follows:

Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the deficiency bill shall cease at four o'clock this day; and if the committee shall not come to a conclusion sooner upon the same, it shall then proceed to vote upon such amendments as shall be pending or offered to the same, and shall then report it to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon by the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have named four o'clock to-day as the time to close the debate upon this bill. I am willing, however, that the House shall fix its own time.

[Cries of "Call the previous question."]

Mr. HOUSTON. Very well. I will ask the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The gentleman asks the previous question upon this resolution. Now, I say that the resolution is all wrong.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. It is not in order for the gentleman from Arkansas to discuss the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. But there is an amendment to that resolution which has not been read at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, no; there is no amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas will recollect that this is a new proposition—not the one offered yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I desire to know if there is not an amendment to this resolution which has not been reported by the Clerk at all?

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state to the gentleman that, on yesterday, a resolution was offered by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] proposing to close debate on the deficiency bill. An amendment was offered to that resolution. The gentleman from Alabama, however, to-day withdrew that resolution, and now offers a new proposition, upon which the previous question has been called.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will, under the circumstances, allow me to offer an amendment. If he will permit me, I will state my reasons for making the request, and I am sure there can be no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not care about the gentleman's reasons. I hope he will not take up the time of the House. I am perfectly willing he should offer his amendment, and let the House vote to fix such a time as they choose. I will withdraw the call for the previous question, and I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will renew it after he shall have offered his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will now offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Alabama as withdrawing the call for the previous question?

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw it for the moment, in order to allow the gentleman from Arkansas to offer his amendment. I understand his amendment is, to provide for closing debate at four o'clock to-morrow. I am willing the House should vote upon that amendment, and upon it I call the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to know by what authority the gentleman from Alabama puts an amendment in my mouth. I offered no such amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood the gentleman as indicating that amendment. I will withdraw the call for the previous question, and the gentleman can offer such an amendment as he pleases.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit this amendment. I move that this debate shall be closed at four o'clock the day after to-morrow. My reasons for offering the amendment are these: the deficiency bill makes provision for the Indian service of the country. Now, there are several items in this bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman is not going to debate the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will not debate it. I pledge myself to that. I am only stating facts. I can debate it, however, if I want to, while I have the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must call the gentleman to order. I understand, that according to our rules of order, the gentleman cannot debate the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, I was remarking that the estimates for the Indian Department have not been under consideration in committee. A large number of them have been rejected by the Committee of Ways and Means, and that without sufficient reason, as some of us believe. Now, I say the House ought to give us time to investigate the matter thoroughly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. FULLER. I object to this debate.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman cannot proceed.

Mr. STUART. I desire to ask if it is in order to move to amend the resolution, so as to close the debate to-morrow at four o'clock?

Mr. JOHNSON. I moved to amend the resolution by inserting the day after to-morrow.

Mr. KING. I understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] is willing that the question shall be taken upon the three propositions—to-day, to-morrow, and the day after.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to understand the proposition. The Chair called me to order when he had no right to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to say to the gentleman from Arkansas, that it is by the courtesy of the Chair and the House that he was allowed to say one word upon the subject at all, for it is not a debatable question.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is not a motion to close debate a debatable question?

The SPEAKER. It is not, and the Chair has so announced half a dozen times.

The question was being taken on the amendment to the amendment under a division when—

Mr. FULLER, of Maine, inquired upon which day the amendment to the amendment proposed to close debate.

The SPEAKER. It proposes to close debate to-morrow, at four o'clock.

Mr. STUART called for tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. EWING and STUART appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 45.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the adoption of the resolution as amended, the effect of which will be to close debate to-morrow, at four o'clock.

The question was then taken, and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an unobjectionable resolution, which will not occupy any time.

The resolution was then read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures, now having under consideration the claims of the American exhibitors at the World's Fair, be instructed to take into consideration the brilliant victory won by the yacht America, and recommend such action as they may deem proper for Congress to take on the subject.

Mr. PHELPS objected.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. MEADE in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose, it had under consideration House bill No. 207, making appropriation to supply deficiencies. The question being upon the adoption of the first clause thereof, and upon that question the gentleman from Maine [Mr. APPLETON] has the floor.

Mr. APPLETON addressed the House during an hour, upon the condition and principles of the Democratic party; and expressed his belief that that party would be harmonious after the presidential nomination, and would succeed in the approaching election.

Mr. TOWNSHEND spoke an hour, and defined the position of the Democratic party of Ohio, as he understood it, in regard to the compromise measures. He expressed his belief that that party would not sustain those measures as a totality and finally, if insisted on by the Baltimore Convention. Messrs. OLDS and EDGERTON dissented from his views.

[These speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. CHANDLER obtained the floor.

Mr. NABERS. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the gentleman from Mississippi has any more family troubles to bring up, I will cheerfully resign the floor to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. NABERS. I do not claim the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rose to make a few remarks, but I understand the honorable gentleman on the other side of the House [Mr. NABERS] has it in contemplation to address the committee on a subject which will be more germane to what has been said than any thing I shall be likely to say, [laughter.] I will, however, if he will allow me, make a very few remarks, and then take my seat.

Mr. NABERS. I hope the gentleman will go on and make his speech. I do not claim the floor. However, I am much obliged to the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. CHANDLER. We have now before us a bill, reported to this House on the 20th of February. It has been discussed for several days in this committee, or at least it ought to have been; but I presume not one word of this bill has ever been read in this committee by the Clerk.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a speech, not upon any troubles existing in the Democratic or the Whig party in the State of Pennsylvania. They have a common field where they settle their troubles, and to which they resort whenever they find it necessary for either branch to break a lance with the other. They never would appear upon the floor with a complaint of the wrong doings of this or that branch of the party. They would never come here to laud the Democracy or the Whiggery of that State. They know, and they try to show, that they were sent here for other purposes.

Mr. Chairman, a great mistake has been committed by the representatives of the people on this floor. One of the first things that a man owes to himself is self-respect. And one of the first things a legislative body owes to itself is the exhibition of that self-respect. I will not say it has not been exhibited here; but there is going abroad a report of the proceedings of this body upon this very bill, which is bringing upon this House that contempt of the people, which, in time, if fostered by a continuance of the cause, will do more to endanger the republican institutions of the country, and centralize power, than all the efforts of a corrupt Executive could ever produce.

Never, sir, in a country like this, can the legislative branch of the Government lose its power, its due weight, until, by neglecting the legitimate object of its creation, it proceeds to snatch from the people their reserved privileges, or gives itself up to the dictation of an ambitious executive. Sir, legislative power never recedes from the legislature, until its legislators themselves concede, by their conduct, that they are unfit to exercise it. To make the laws is our business; to make rulers and law-makers is the business of the people. But, sir, it will be better for the House to earn the anger of the people, than to acquire their contempt. The former may vent itself in displacing the individuals that compose this body; the latter will result in inquiries into the use of this body.

But, Mr. Chairman, I hear much talking of dangers to the institutions of the country, and the dangers, too, that are springing from some of our party organizations. But there are dangers apparently unnoticed by this House—dangers which, though not springing from our own institutions, are nevertheless around and near us; danger stalking abroad in this country! to which the President of the United States has alluded in his annual message—dangers, sir, greater than can spring up from our own people and our own institutions, which are being ingrafted with these evil heresies brought from abroad, and presented with a view of being made a part of our own institutions. And yet, sir, that message has never been referred to the appropriate committees. The Committee on Foreign Relations has never been directed, by this House, to consider that portion of the message which would lead to a consideration of our policy of non-interference with the institutions of other countries, and of the propriety of considering how far people from other countries may, by interference with our institutions, disturb the political peace of this nation by inappropriate associations, or the destruction of social quiet and individual morals by the promulgation of sentiments which, if allowed to operate, would work out the destruction of a republican form of government, which can only exist with the predominance of virtue.

Yet, sir, instead of moving to the detection and the correction of such evils, we are sitting here "in cold debate" upon the character and quality of the old rotten boards of the Baltimore platform. Sir, the constant recurrence of speakers to "a platform" to be erected is most grating to my ears.

There is danger, imminent danger, in these platforms. They are set up, sir, to attract the eye, and insure the reverence and consent of those who are of party discipline; but, sir, they are no more the images of constitutional requirements or privileges than was the image which Nebuchadnezzar set up in the province of Babylon, a likeness of the true God, though all must fall down and do worship.

That last, however, Mr. Chairman, may be regarded as a party evil, of which, if the Democrats do not complain, I do not know that I need trouble myself; and even though they did, it would, perhaps, be enough for me to offer the complainants an asylum in the Whig ranks without attempting any interference in their behalf.

But the evil is of national extent, and is working in the general mind, an indifference to the pure teachings of the Constitution, that will finally allow that glorious instrument to sink into oblivion, and party platforms suggested by party wants, local conveniences, and temporary expediences, will usurp, in the affections and regard of the people, that reverence and that obedience which are alone the right of the Constitution. Mr. Chairman, I tremble for the country, when, on this floor, I hear party men avowing themselves men instead of the nation's men, and see them seizing on some rotten plank of a decayed, or some green and sappy contribution to a rising, platform, and trusting to that more than to the Constitution of the country. On various sides of me, but as yet always from the Democratic party, I hear the confession: "I am of Paul, I am of Apollon, and I of Cephass." Sir, give me the man as a candidate or a voter, who lays his hand on the organic law of the nation and says, I am for the Constitution, I of Washington.

Mr. Chairman, day by day have we listened to these speeches; and what is the cause of it? Why, not long since, there was a proposition introduced into this House, by which the printing of a certain document—which should be very costly—should be given to a certain establishment in this city—"the Organ," it is said, "of the Democratic party." Of that organ, I have nothing to say. I know nothing bad of it beyond its party affinities. Its tones are discordant to my political ear. But we have heard, at different times, its groans and wailings, through its friends, for want of the usual pabulum. That pabulum was not given to it; and what has been the result here upon the floor of this House? Why, every day we see men resorting to means to carry out a party measure, and keep up party discipline, at the expense of the national Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, I am not so ignorant of the ways and means of parties, as not to know that the patronage of the Government is likely to flow into the channel which will most promote the views of the majority. I do not complain of the effort to sustain a party paper; but I do complain, and I have a right to complain, that the party having failed in its attempt to procure liberal patronage for their paper, so that it might act upon the question of the Baltimore Convention, should seize upon the time of this House, and transform our Chamber into a party caucus, to influence the election of delegates, or the opinions and votes of delegates, to the Baltimore Convention.

But, sir, I impugn no man's motives. I interfere with no man's party. Gentlemen upon the other side of the House who know me, and some do, know that I am incapable of that. But here we are now closing the fourth month of our session; and yet what have we done? One gentleman rises upon the other side of the House [Mr. HILLYER] and impugns the laws of Massachusetts; as if we had anything to do with the difficulties and troubles of Massachusetts. The same gentleman says that the members of the Massachusetts Legislature have tried to repeal, and did repeal, the laws of that State, by which it was forbidden to a white man to marry a colored woman, and vice versa. What have we to do with that? Have not the people of Massachusetts as good a right to make laws by which a white man shall be allowed the privilege to wive with a black woman, as the people of any other State have to make laws granting the white man any other privilege, without being married? [Laughter.]

But I feel that I am subjecting myself to the charge of a waste of time. I feel that the business of the House is being delayed; but until the finger of that clock points to four, somebody will waste the time of the House, and I might as well do it as anybody else.

I beg to say one word to my young friend, the member from the Portland district of Maine, [Mr. APPLETON.] That gentleman to-day made his coup d'essai upon this floor, in a style of rhetoric which did himself infinite credit. It was pleasing to my ear, and, as a literary effort, in harmony with my feelings, as an old professor. Sir, I was delighted with it. But I did start a little when that gentleman pointed with the finger of contempt to this side of the House. I noticed the curl of his lip as he alluded to the small number of Whigs now left in this National Council. I deplore it; and so will the nation deplore it, if the majority of this House continue to waste the time that is the property of the nation.

But let me say to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. APPLETON]—and I speak from reading, my memory leads me back to it—that if there had been one tenth part of the number of good men in Sodom that there are Whigs in this House, they would have saved that whole city from destruction. [Laughter.] Whether we shall be saved or not must depend upon how far the contamination extends, how far the corruption of coalition may have gone amongst us.

But there is another point: Three or four days of this House (and if any gentleman will figure up its cost they will find it something like three thousand dollars a day) have been spent in discussing the character of the coalition of the Massachusetts Legislature—the coalition of the people of Massachusetts—whether Mr. A or Mr. B should be Governor. Sir, I dislike coalition; but I believe they are frequently formed in tolerably good motives, and honest persons sacrifice some part of their creed for the sake of defeating some of the opposite creed. Sometimes, I believe, they sacrifice a part of their favorite creed for the purpose of carrying the good point that is left of them. Not always, but as a general rule, I have not found them very beneficial. We have had some little experience in my own State, in which I got my finger into the vice. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, all the coalitions and compromises of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and elsewhere, however good or bad they may have been, have no business in this House. They do not concern the legislation of the nation; they have nothing to do with the people, or the legislation for the people. As to that of Massachusetts, of course the coalition was to sacrifice a good man, and they did it. The Whig candidate for Governor was a good man. I do not recollect of many instances of the evil motives or improper circumstances that lead to a union for political effects; but the coalition of Pilate and Herod may be cited as an unfavorable instance of union of interests, otherwise hostile. But hostile as they had been, they were agreed upon a certain point, [laughter,] the result of which, however, is better found elsewhere than quoted here. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I do beseech the gentlemen of the House, in the first place, to pardon the appearance which I, older than a large majority of this House, may have of dictation, or of direction. I have no desire to place myself here as the censor of this House, but I desire to preserve the institutions of this country, in whose hands soever they are placed for administration. I desire that the people abroad, in this nation, who never come up to the Capitol, and who cannot often see us, but who have sent their representatives here, should know that, whatever may be the character of the individuals whom they send, that they, mingling with the dignified and honorable class of citizens who represent that people, still bear upon themselves the toga of the man, and the dignity of the Senator, and that this House should cease to be the place of party action, party dictation, and party operation, as if there was nothing for us to consider but the Democracy of the Union, and nothing for us to stand upon but the platform of Baltimore. I do not speak lightly of the Democratic party. I know their value. I know and approve of the men, more than of their sentiments. And I do not speak lightly of the machinery of their action. It belongs to them. But do not bring that machinery into this House; do not impede the progress of business; do not starve the people who stand at our doors, waiting for the payment of their bills, while we are discussing questions mooted by ourselves, which candidate will be most available, whether it will be the old "foggy" or the young "foggy"—whether it will be the man who went pocketless and penniless over the Alleghenies to earn a living, or whether it will be he who comes back with his pocket full, both, sir, asking for a place. Let us have nothing to do with them here. Either of them, if elected by a majority of the people, will be the lawful President of this Union, and will be entitled to my respect, and, so far as he administers the law, he will be entitled no less to my obedience; yes, sir, to my cheerful, willing, obedience and support.

But, sir, while we are hesitating, the time is passing, and the honor of the nation is at stake, and bills against our Government—if not protested, are at least liable to be protested—are not to be paid because we are, by talking, delaying the passage of the bills that lie before us, and are wasting our time and the patience of the people, rather than to proceed to the business that belongs to us. It is not my purpose, sir, I repeat it, to condemn the speeches to which I have alluded, or the sentiments which I have examined generally. There is a time and there is a place for all these things; but I say that this is not the time, nor this the place. Party caucuses should be held by party calls, and in party places, while the representatives of the people, clothed not only with the power of making laws, but with the dignity of sustaining for the people the honor of the Republic, and maintaining for themselves the respect of the people, should in the time, and in halls of legislation, solemnize their minds to the loftiness of their missions, and separate themselves from all motives of action less than the good of the nation and the honor of its Councils.

Mr. McLANAHAN, (interrupting.) I ask my honorable colleague, since he has attributed to the Democratic side of the House a delay in legislation, where the discussion commenced in regard to the making of Presidents and platforms? I wish him to state distinctly, if the whole discussion was not opened upon the Whig side of the House, by the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. CABELL?]

Mr. CHANDLER. I am speaking of the discussion which has taken place upon the deficiency bill. [Laughter.] That is what I am speaking upon; but since the whole matter has been up, I will—

Mr. McLANAHAN. One word more. All that I intend to say is, that the Democratic party and the country are extremely thankful for the effort which is made now, upon the Whig side of the House, to close this unprofitable discussion; and it is hoped, on all sides of the House, that it will close with the speech of my colleague, [Mr. CHANDLER.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I then close my speech with the vote of thanks which the House, through the honorable gentleman, my colleague, has given me. [Laughter.]

Mr. FREEMAN next addressed the House in regard to the position of the Southern-Rights and Democratic Union parties in Mississippi.

[The speech of Mr. F. will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. HART, who moved that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to, there being upon a division—ayes 68, noes 44.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. STANLY. I ask leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given, in order that it may be referred to a committee.

Mr. KING, of New York. What is it?

Mr. ORR. Let it be read for information.

The bill was then read by its title, as follows:

"A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth instalment of the deposits of public money directed to be made with said States, by the act of June 23, 1835."

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to report back a petition which was referred to them. It is from the conductors of the Kentucky penitentiary, asking pay for taking care of, and supporting convicts, sentenced by the United States courts to the Kentucky State prison.

Mr. BAYLY. I withdraw my objection to the reference of the bill offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY.]

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read a second time, if there is no objection.

Mr. NABERS. I object. Everybody upon this floor has more or less bills to refer.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that objection is made to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee making a report?

Mr. NABERS. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would state to my friend from Mississippi that this is a matter of some interest to my State. I have been trying for two months to get this report in. I never objected to anything in my life upon this floor.

Mr. NABERS. I am not disposed to be factious, and have never been since I came here. I have not been able to get the floor when I was entitled to it, and I reaffirm here now, that this objection is not out of discourtesy to the gentleman from Kentucky, or anybody else—not at all, sir; but other gentlemen have various bills which they desire to have introduced.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is not a bill. Perhaps the gentleman is not aware what I wanted.

Mr. NABERS. I have never got up upon the floor but what I have heard that discordant sound—I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Not from me.

Mr. NABERS. No, sir; not from the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. NABERS. A single word more, I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I object to all debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind gentlemen that the question is not debatable.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman from Mississippi did not insist upon his objection, and the chairman is ready to report.

Mr. NABERS. I was going to say this: I intended to cast no reflection upon the course any gentleman thought proper to pursue, and simply for the reason that I do not wish to imitate the bad example shown. I will withdraw my objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the claim of the State of Kentucky against the United States, for keeping and supporting convicts sentenced by the United States courts to the Kentucky State prison, to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal of the above claims from the files of the House, for the purpose of reference to the proper Department.

Mr. STANLY. I ask if objection is withdrawn to the introduction of my bill, for the purpose of reference.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I have risen a dozen times, and have not got the privilege. I object.

Mr. BARRERE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported the following bills as correctly enrolled, viz:

An act for the relief of James Fergusson, surviving partner of the firm of Fergusson & Milhado; an act for the relief of Williams, Staples, & Williams; an act for the relief of Philip Miller; and the joint resolution for the relief of Elizabeth Prewitt, widow and executrix of Robert C. Prewitt, deceased; which, severally, were signed by the Speaker.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want just to say to the House, that it is proper that we should clear the Speaker's table of the communications and bills that are there. I therefore ask the House to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table. It will not take more than half an hour.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to be permitted to state that I have looked over the bills upon the Speaker's table. They are few in number, and I know cannot occasion debate. I hope unanimous consent will be given to clear the Speaker's table.

Mr. SMART. I object.

On motion by Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, the House adjourned.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were severally read a third time, and passed:

A bill granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Hannibal to Saint Joseph, in said State.

The title of the above bill was amended by striking out all after the words "construction of," and inserting "certain railroads in that State."

A bill granting to the State of Arkansas the right of way and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of the Arkansas Central railroad from a point on the western bank of the Mississippi river, opposite the town of Memphis, Tennessee, by way of Little Rock, to a point on Red river, on the border of Texas.

The bill having first been amended on the motion of Mr. BORLAND, by inserting at the end of the third section the following words:

"Which land shall, from time to time, be offered at public sale to the highest bidder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall not be subject to entry until they shall have been so offered at public sale."

The title of the above bill was amended by striking out all after the words "construction of," and inserting "certain railroads in that State."

A bill granting to the State of Alabama the right of way and a donation of public land, for making a railroad from Selma to the Tennessee river.

A joint resolution to provide for straightening the eastern boundary line of the naval hospital lands at New York.

A bill to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which that State is entitled, under the act of the 8th of August, 1846, to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers.

A bill making an appropriation for the erection of a marine hospital at Portland, Maine.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the bill to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the above bill, and it was amended accordingly.

NON-INTERVENTION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution affirming the doctrine of non-intervention; when

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, rose and addressed the Senate at length in favor of the resolution.

Mr. CASS replied, and Mr. JONES, rejoined. [For the speech of Mr. JONES, and reply of Mr. Cass, see Appendix.]

Mr. SOULE. I wish to say something on this question, and I wish to deliver my views as early as may be convenient to the Senate. I would not undertake now to address the Senate, as it is rather late; but with the leave of the Senate I will take possession of the floor, and move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until Monday.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I want simply to call the attention of the honorable Senator from Michigan to one fact, in which I think he is mistaken in regard to the history of the resolution to which he has referred. When he spoke of having introduced the resolution which was voted down, I supposed that he referred to the resolution which he introduced in relation to suspending diplomatic relations with Austria.

Mr. CASS. I did.

Mr. HALE. Well, I have some recollection of that resolution. I felt some interest in it at the time, and I think if the honorable Senator will examine the matter, he will find that he is mistaken. On the 15th of December, 1849, at the commencement of that session, the honorable Senator introduced his resolution in relation to suspending diplomatic relations with Austria. I proposed an amendment to it. It was called up several times, and several gentlemen addressed the Senate upon it until the 5th of February, 1850, and then Mr. Foote, at that time a member of the Senate from Mississippi, stated that he held in his hand certain resolutions which he proposed to offer, and that one was to be proposed by his friend from Louisiana, [Mr. SOULE,] and that the honorable Senator from Michigan had consented to receive those three resolutions as a substitute for his original one. I withdrew my amendment then, and upon the motion of Mr. Foote those resolutions were assigned and made the special order for a future day. They were never called up afterwards, and there was never any vote taken upon them according to my recollection, as the Journals of the Senate will show. That is the statement which I desired to make.

Mr. CASS. I was under the impression that a vote had been taken.

Mr. HALE. No, sir; there was no vote taken.

Mr. CASS. If there was not a vote taken, it was because it was evident that a majority of the Senate were not in favor of the resolution.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 18, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, so far as to take up and refer certain Executive communications and certain bills from the Senate. If the House will permit me to say, I have looked over the bills from the Senate. They are few in number, and I am confident the question of their reference can occasion no debate. It is understood I wish for leave to proceed so far as to take up these two classes of cases: reports from Executive Departments and bills from the Senate. Objection was made.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] in view of the condition of debate upon the deficiency bill, will not press that now.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no control over that question at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the House to pass that over for to-day, as debate upon the deficiency bill is limited to four o'clock to-day. I have therefore submitted the motion to go into committee.

Mr. JONES. It will take up but little time. The call for the previous question has been seconded.

The SPEAKER. That is the regular business in order, but the Chair thinks it competent for the gentleman from Alabama to make his motion.

Mr. JONES. I hope the House will not go into committee, as this is a very important question—as much so as the deficiency bill—and should be disposed of immediately.

The question being on the motion of Mr. HOUSTON—

Mr. HART called for tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. FULLER, of Maine, and HAVEN were appointed.

Mr. COBB. If we take up for consideration the report of the committee of conference on the bill for the assignability of land warrants, I would inquire whether it would take up more than thirty or forty minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to reply to the gentleman. He cannot determine how long it will take.

The question was then taken and decided in the negative—the tellers having reported—ayes 55, noes 68.

So the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ASSIGNABILITY OF BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS—REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE.

Mr. JONES called up for consideration the report of the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. Upon the question of the adoption of the report of the committee of conference, the call for the previous question was seconded. The question now is, shall the main question be now put? It was so ordered.

The question now being on concurring in the report of the committee of conference,

Mr. JONES demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. COBB. I ask for the reading of the bill as proposed to be amended.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object. I want to get through with this business.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order. If a request is made for the reading of the bill, which is objected to, should not the question be put to the House? I am opposed to this one man power.

The SPEAKER. If the gentlemen will listen to the facts, the Chair will state that the report of the committee of conference, and the bill as proposed to be amended, was read on yesterday. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. My colleague will find it in the Globe, where he can read it, and understand it much better than if it were read from the desk.

Mr. BOCK. Is the vote about to be taken on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. The question now being put is upon agreeing to the amendments proposed by the committee of conference to the bill making land warrants assignable. It is upon the adoption of the report of the committee as a whole.

The question was then taken, and the report of the committee was adopted—yeas 92, nays 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Barrere, Bartlett, Bell, Bibbians, Bowne, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cullom, John G. Davis, Doty, Duncan, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Giddings, Goodnow, Gorman, Harper, S. W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Thomas M. Howe, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Kubus, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, McNair, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Morrison, Nabers, Newton, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Polk, Price, Richardson, Robinson, Sackett, Skelton, Smart, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Wilcox, and Yates—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Averett, Boeck, Brooks, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Chapman, Curtis, Daniel, Dawson, Dimmick, Dunham, Durkee, Evans, Floyd, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gilmore, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hibbard, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, James Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Milson, H. D. Moore, Morehead, Murray, Olds, Orr, Peaslee, Perkins, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Wallace, Wells, Alexander White, Wildrick, Williams, and Woodward—69.

So the report of the committee was adopted, and the bill in the form published in the proceedings of yesterday, has passed.

Mr. BEALE, during the pendency of the vote, asked to be excused from voting, on the ground that he did not know the character of the report upon which he was called to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia should have been made under the rule, before the call of the roll was commenced. There can be no vote upon a proposition to excuse during the calling of the roll.

Mr. COBB, when his name was called, said: I vote in the affirmative, but am opposed to a part of the bill.

Mr. C. moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STUART in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill, No. 207, making appropriation to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852.

Mr. SMITH, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the committee for an hour, principally upon the subject of the census printing. He expressed some views in opposition to the form in which it was proposed by the Department of the Interior to have that work executed. He was in favor of rejecting so much of the matter proposed to be printed—that is, the medical statistics and the historic part—and was in favor of printing the work in a reduced form, and on a more economical scale. He expressed some views in regard to the Presidency, and in opposition to taking up for that office defeated candidates, and resuming old issues. He preferred progress, and a young or new candidate.

Mr. NABERS next addressed the committee, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SMITH,] in regard to the unfitness of the old presidential candidates. He thought that the progressive doctrines advanced by that gentleman now were totally at variance with those expressed by him in regard to the principles of Kosuth. He (Mr. N.) was disposed rather to adhere to the conservative policy of our government rather than upon any idea of progress to take up "Young America" and new and dangerous doctrines. He entered at some length into Mississippi politics, and defended the position of the Union party of that State.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, then addressed the committee, principally in reply to that portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] identifying Mr. Fillmore with the Abolition party, because he had, when a Representative on that floor from New York, voted against the resolution of Mr. Wise, inhibiting the consideration of abolition petitions. He maintained that if it was wrong for Mr. Fillmore to vote against the adoption of that resolution, it was equally wrong when the Democratic party subsequently voted for the rescission of this very rule. He maintained that President Fillmore was national and conservative in his views on the slave question.

[The above speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I have sought anxiously to-day what, in the history of this Congress, would have been a somewhat extraordinary thing—to obtain the floor for the purpose of addressing the House upon the business legitimately before us, (the deficiency bill,) and which we were sent here to transact. We have had that bill but a very few days under discussion—a bill which appropriates about $3,000,000. I have never examined the whole bill, and only wish to speak upon those appropriations, into the investigation of which the committee, of which I am a member, have hitherto gone. I speak of that portion of the deficiency bill which makes appropriation for the Indian service of the country. During the whole time which has been spent upon this bill, we have heard nothing but a squabble about presidential candidates—a matter which I humbly submit is premature and unfortunate for the Democratic party, and in which none who have been engaged in it will be able to say, that they have distinguished themselves for prudence. They should have waited until such time as these questions come up legitimately—when there was a candidate for the Presidency—and then discuss those subjects; and allow us, in the mean time, to take up and consider what was truly the business of the House, and that is, the various bills brought before us for consideration.

The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means enforced, yesterday, upon this House the necessity of closing the debate upon this bill to-day, with a full knowledge—I speak of it in no unkindly sense to the gentleman, but I condemn it as a thing that was wrong, and as a thing that I never knew in my term of service to be done heretofore by the Committee of Ways and Means—that a committee, parallel with his own in point of business upon a particular subject, had that subject under consideration, and had asked for time to develop facts which might be laid before this House for its consideration, in regard to the interests of this Government and the service of a particular branch thereof. I asked, then, of this House, only until to-morrow, that we might be able to conclude our investigation of the appropriation for the Indian service, but it was denied. It was denied by the chairman of the Ways and Means, who knew more about the business of my committee than I knew myself, or than anybody else knew. I am sorry the House thought so, and closed this debate to-day. What is the result? We worked until twelve o'clock last night, and again until twelve o'clock to-day, and without being able to get through with the entire investigation. We are satisfied that the Committee of Ways and Means have erred, in striking out thirteen out of twenty-six items of appropriation for Indian service. When I come in here to state these facts to the House, I am unable to get the floor; and now I have five minutes to go into the investigation of a subject which it would take me an hour to do justice to or to explain to the House. I am not famed for consuming the time of the House for purposes of Buncombe or of personal display.

I ask the House, what are you to do when you come to vote upon these questions? I know I shall stand instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer, as amendments to the deficiency bill, a large number of the items for Indian service which have been rejected by the Ways and Means; and I shall have but five minutes to explain the necessity of those items, many of which could not be explained in ten or fifteen minutes. Debate ought to be heard on both sides, as to whether the Ways and Means Committee did right in rejecting these items. The Committee on Indian Affairs believe they can show satisfactorily to the House that they did wrong in rejecting them; but it cannot be done in five minutes. I would scorn to go into the consideration of any subject in five minutes. I merely want to show the House the condition that this business has been brought into by the hasty and sudden closing of debate; and that, too, in the face of the protest of a member of the committee, who declared that the debate ought not to be closed, and could not be closed, without a risk of great and serious injury to the service of the country, and to that portion of the service in which, if there is heart, and soul, and feeling, in the bosom of the American people, they ought to be most peculiarly guarded to see that there is no injustice done.

Mr. POLK, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will allow me, I will move, by unanimous consent, that he be permitted to go into this investigation. I consider this a matter of considerable importance. I, myself, know nothing about it. No argument has been addressed to it at all, and I should be obliged to vote in the dark.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state that when this debate was closed yesterday, the same hot haste prevailing, after the wrong itself was consummated, a motion was made to reconsider the resolution and that motion was laid upon the table. There is, therefore, no way in which I can obtain a hearing, for if it depends on unanimous consent, I presume in a House of two hundred and thirty-seven, there would always be somebody to object to everything. Yes, even the light of heaven is objected to here.

Mr. POLK. I hope there will be no objection. I will, with the permission of the gentleman, move that the committee rise.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well. I will give way for that motion, trusting that when next we go into committee, I shall be allowed, by unanimous consent, to explain the items; if not the Indian service can take its course.

Mr. POLK then moved that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

SEAT OF GOVERNMENT OF OREGON.

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolutions; which were several read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House a copy of the correspondence with John P. Gaines, Governor of the Territory of Oregon, relative to the location and establishment of the seat of government of said Territory.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to lay before this House, a copy of the correspondence between that Department, and E. Hamilton, Secretary of Oregon relative to the location of the seat of government of said Territory, and the mileage and per diem of the members and officers of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory.

Mr. MEADE. I have a drawer full of reports from the Committee on the Judiciary, which I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to present.

Mr. BAYLY. I would be the last man to thwart my colleague in anything, but I object. [Laughter.]

On motion by Mr. MEADE, the House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ST. MARTIN: The petitioner of John B. Cooper, claiming remuneration for losses sustained in the war of 1812.

By Mr. JOHNSON, of Ohio: The memorial of David McFarland and William Welty, of Tuscarawas county, asking additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

Also, the memorial of John D. Wilhams and others, citizens of North Carolina, against the extension of the Parker patent.

By Mr. HENDRICKS: The petitions of John D. Smith, of Tipton county, and P. Hutton, of Marion county, in the State of Indiana, late assistant marshals of said counties, praying that additional compensation be made to the assistant marshals for services in taking the Seventh Census of the United States.

By Mr. THOMPSON, of Virginia: The petition of E. S. M. Hill and 130 other citizens of the county of Logan, against the renewal of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. SCUDER: The petition of Benjamin F. Robbins and others, owners of schooner Medium lost at sea, for an allowance of fishing bounty.

By Mr. BOWIE: The petition of John H. Bright, praying to be allowed bounty land due his uncle, William Bright, a revolutionary soldier.

By Mr. McDONALD: The petition of Horace Parker, for increase of pay for his services at navy-yard in Kittery, Maine.

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania: Resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania "relating to Smith O'Brien and his associates in exile;" and also in reference to the establishment of a navy-yard depot and dry-dock on the Lake frontier.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 19, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, a letter has just been published in the Union, addressed by Colonel Davis to the editors of the Mississippiian, and copied from the latter paper, which, relating as it does, to some of the positions I have taken in the Senate, as well as elsewhere, seems to me to require some remarks; especially as my true views, in one respect at least, are misunderstood. I have to thank Colonel Davis for the justice he has done me, with that spirit of frankness which becomes his character. And, while he dissents from my conclusions, as he had a right to do, he bears testimony against an odious charge, never, indeed, resting upon the slightest foundation of truth, that I designed to deceive the South, as to my real opinions, in my Nicholson letter. Some time since, when I first learned this accusation, I appealed to Southern Senators upon this floor, and said it was well known to many of them, that the plain language of my letter corresponded with my views, and that my opinions were perfectly understood when the letter was first published. You will recollect, sir, that not one member contradicted this statement, and that several of them gave their assent to it, and among these was Colonel Davis.

I am not going into a review of the old controversy, connected with the general subject of the Wilmot proviso. I desire, principally, to put myself right, in one particular, where Colonel Davis has misunderstood me. It will be recollected that when my Nicholson letter was written, we had not acquired California. It was yet during the existence of the war, and the principles I discussed had therefore relation to the usual form of territorial governments, as established by the authority of Congress. My object was to show that Congress had no constitutional power to insert the Wilmot proviso in the organic laws, because the right to establish such governments being founded upon necessity alone, could extend no further than that necessity required, which is satisfied when the governments are organized, leaving to the people all other rights in their administration. These organic laws, all of them indeed, grant or recognize the right of legislation in the Territories, to be exercised in the mode pointed out. It is a general power, embracing all the objects of human legislation, unless in particular cases, where restrictions are imposed. My opinion is, that Congress can impose no restriction upon the power to regulate the relation of master and servant, including the condition of slavery in the Territories, any more than they can upon the relations of husband and wife, or of parent and child. Every Territorial Legislature which has existed has exercised full power, uncontrolled power, over the two latter domestic relations, by virtue of being the depositories of legislative authority, and not because those objects, or indeed any others, were specially committed to their charge; thus assuming that it is a just object for such action, in consequence of the grant of general powers of legislation. And in the Territories, where there has been no Wilmot proviso, the power to regulate the condition of slavery has been freely exercised among the other objects of legislation, without any express grant whatever; and in all of them it could be exercised in the same manner, either to establish or abolish slavery, unless controlled by superior Congressional action, in conformity with the Constitution. I should like to have any man point to me a single reason why a Territorial Legislature, if left uncontrolled in this respect by Congress—and all who are opposed to the Wilmot proviso believe they should be thus left—can legislate upon one of these domestic relations and not upon the others. I speak of the legal power, for that is the question at issue. Upon what principle can a line be drawn on the chart of legislation, which would divide those great objects of social life, and leave one of them without the sphere of legitimate control, and the other within it? The same general terms of power which include one include all; and yet we are called upon to deny that power in a particular case, and to leave it in unquestionable operation in all other cases. If indeed, as I have heretofore said, and now repeat, the right to take slaves into the Territories is one, as has been contended, which is secured by the Constitution, there is an end to the question. It would be a right which would override and overthrow both congressional and territorial legislation in opposition to it. I have never been able, myself, to see the force of that construction which gives this effect to any of the constitutional provisions, but I was always willing, and so expressed myself, that the question, being a claim of right, should be submitted to the Supreme Court, and that its decision should be final. But it will be observed that Colonel Davis, in his letter, and I believe those who take similar views of this question, place their opposition to my doctrine, not upon the establishment of such a constitutional right, to be found in the Constitution itself, but upon the probable practical result of the territorial power, that it would give a peculiar direction, in the early periods of the governments, to the legislation of the country, and if not establish, at any rate exercise, a powerful influence upon its permanent policy. No doubt, sir, it would be so; but it is one of those consequences that cannot well be avoided. There are wide differences of opinion in many portions of this country upon questions of internal policy, and little uniformity of system in their adjustment. Each settler, during the period of settlement, naturally prefers that state of things to which he has been accustomed, and thus it is that an early character is given to these local institutions, which it is afterwards difficult to change. It is not alone the condition of master and servant, which feels the effect of this impress, but it extends to all the objects of legislation, which derive their color very much from the views of the first settlers. If a newly-settling Territory is first occupied by a majority of emigrants from a slave State, they will be very apt to establish slavery in their new residence. If, on the contrary, they come from a non-slaveholding State, they will probably be equally strongly inclined to establish that exclusion to which they have been accustomed; and so with relation to all the objects of concern which are regulated by law. And where was there ever a community whose political and social system was not more or less influenced by the predominant opinions and character which marked its early inhabitants? But this objection, sir, whatever weight it is entitled to in the scale of expediency, does not touch the question of right. That does not even depend on Congressional action, but upon the Constitution, which does not even look to this subject of early or of late legislation, nor the practical considerations to which it may give rise. The rightful power, therefore, is not affected by the mode in which it may be exercised, whether bearing upon one or another of the vast variety of objects of civilized life which fall within the scope of legislation. All, therefore, I claimed for the territorial governments was the right of legislation in all cases not in conflict with the Constitution; the same general rights of legislation, which enabled the territorial governments of Mississippi, of Alabama, and other Southern Territories, to control the question of slavery within their limits, and which the Northern Territories might have controlled at their pleasure, had there been no restriction upon their power. This was no question of "sovereignty," but of right, under the sovereign authority of the Constitution. And if the first settlers in the Territories might establish their future policy upon this subject, by early legislation, I know of no constitutional principle which could refuse the same powers to all the others.

A few words more, sir, as to California, and what has been called "squatter sovereignty." I have already said, that my Nicholson letter referred only to such territorial governments as had been established by Congress, and it looked only to such governments to be thereafter established by the same authority, over future acquisitions, should any such be confirmed to us by a treaty of peace. As to the condition of things in California, which followed, in consequence of the failure of Congress to provide governments for the Mexican cessions, no one foresaw it; certainly no one endeavored to provide against it. My letter, therefore, did not touch that point at all. But the difficulty came, and a large body of American citizens, upon the shores of the Pacific, found themselves without government, and exposed to all the fearful evils, which such a state necessarily brings with it. Life, property, all the objects, indeed, of the social system, were at hazard, without some prompt and efficient action. That action we refused to take, and the people had no other reliance but upon their own wisdom and energy. The result was honorable to themselves, to their country, and to human nature. It was the most trying experiment, perhaps, ever made upon the capacity of man for self-government, but they passed through the fiery furnace unscathed, untouched, indeed, by the devouring element. They established a government, and I am not going to argue with any man, who denies their right to have done so. I assume it as a self-evident proposition, in this middle of the nineteenth century. It was not, as it has been called, an act of revolution; for how can there be a revolution, when there has been no preëxisting government? It was an act of political organization, essential to the very existence of society. Well, sir, if they had to establish a government, what kind of one must it have been? Some say territorial. But, sir, that was impossible, for that kind of government presupposes certain relations with the United States, which Congress alone can define and regulate. It was impossible for a self-constituted government to put itself in that position, with its laws and officers controlled by federal authority, without the action of that authority. Nothing else was left to the people but to do as they did, to lay the foundation of their own government, and then come to Congress with their work. Conceding, then, that they had the right to provide for their indispensable political wants by this course, what limitation was there upon the exercise of their powers, in framing their government? Why, sir, if they could do anything, they could do everything, not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. And this brings me back to the original question: whether the Constitution does expressly, or by necessary implication, prohibit the exercise of this contested power, or whether it grants any rights, which render its action incompatible with their superior obligation. I have already said, I can find, for myself, no such provision in that instrument. It will be recollected, that the whole basis of my argument, whether right or wrong, was founded on the indefeasible right of every distinct political community, to regulate its own government, when not rightfully controlled by some superior authority. The only superior authority which, in this country, could limit this right, must be derived from the Constitution of the United States; and, therefore, every political power, not thus limited, belongs to the people of the Territories. That was and is my view.

As to the term "squatter sovereignty," or "landlord sovereignty," and the reproach it is intended to carry with it, they become neither our age nor country. Men are entitled to government, even if they are landless, and human life and human happiness are worth protection, notwithstanding a remote authority may be the great landlord, holding vast domains in a state of nature, which it neither grants nor governs. Many of the doctrines upon this subject carry us back to the middle ages, when land was everything and man nothing. We have arrived at a period when better views prevail; when human nature asserts its rights, and the exercise of political power does not depend upon the accident of property, but upon the great principles of freedom and just equality. One of two things is inevitable: Either the people of California had the right to establish a government for themselves, without reference to "squatter sovereignty," or "landlord sovereignty," or they were necessarily condemned to live without a government, or rather to die without one; for human life, under such circumstances, would be far more precarious than in the bloodiest battle on record. They chose to do what we refused: to found a political system, affording protection to the great objects of human society; and I know nothing of the character of my countrymen, North or South, if, on calm reflection, they do not approve the proceeding. Nor do I believe there is one of them, no matter where, who, had he been in California in such a perilous crisis, would have hesitated to substitute established law for lawless violence and physical strength.

I observe, what had not struck me before, that in an extract from his speech, which Colonel Davis refers to, he says that I spoke of the fanaticism of the South. Sir, that is a deduction from my remarks, and one which, I think, their tenor does not justify. I used no such term. I made no such charge. I did indeed complain of a too prevalent indisposition among our Southern brethren to make just allowance for the position and natural opinions of Northern men. It was not enough that they should recognize and defend the constitutional rights of the South as zealously and honestly, and, I may add, under circumstances of a good deal of personal difficulty, as those of their own section of country; but they were almost denounced as Abolitionists, as Northern fanatics, I said, in some quarters, unless they avowed and believed that slavery was the best condition of human society. This is the substance of my remarks upon that topic; and I know that this sentiment of regret was participated in by some of the most steadfast friends of the South upon this floor; and certainly those remarks were made not in a spirit of hostility, but with feelings of pain that so little confidence was placed in exertions rightfully and honestly made.

REGISTRY OF VESSELS.

On the motion of Mr. HAMLIN, the bills of the House of Representatives to authorize the issuing of a register to the brig America, and to authorize the issuing of a register to the ship Kosuth, were considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, read a third time, and passed.

NAVY-YARD AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to detain the Senate a single moment, not for the purpose of a personal explanation, but in regard to the disposition that was made of the question which was under consideration yesterday, and has been made the special order for Monday next. I wish to bring to the notice of the Senate that it was understood that another measure, which indeed has not been made a special order, because it stands at the head of the Calendar, was by general consent to be taken up on Monday next. I refer to the bill to establish a navy-yard at San Francisco. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] is entitled to the floor on Monday on the subject of non-intervention. He is not here now, but if he were, I know that he would waive his right to the floor as a matter of courtesy, because I am compelled to leave the city on Tuesday or Wednesday next, and I should like to have this bill taken up and disposed of before that time. I have made all my arrangements, under the impression that this bill would come up on Monday, and it will put me to considerable inconvenience if I am detained beyond that time. I therefore give notice that I shall call up that bill, the first on the Calendar, on Monday next, and I feel perfectly sure that the Senator from Louisiana will not object to it.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 1852.

NEW SERIES.... No. 50.

G. THOMAS HOWARD.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of G. Thomas Howard, as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit and settle the claim of G. Thomas Howard, for compensation as bearer of despatches from Texas to Washington, in 1845, allowing him a compensation at the rate of $6 per day, for a period not exceeding twenty-five days, and traveling expenses at the rate of ten cents per mile, from Austin, in Texas, to Washington City, computing the distance according to the most usual traveling route.

Mr. ATCHISON. I would like to hear the report of the committee read.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that there was no report made by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I reported that bill from the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is no report accompanying the bill. The facts are stated in a letter from the late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Walker, which will explain the whole matter.

The letter was read, as follows:

"WASHINGTON, February 28, 1850.

"DEAR SIR: I recollect very well the case in which you were bearer of despatches from Texas to Washington, and your claim for compensation, during Mr. Polk's Administration. Your right to compensation was invariably conceded; but you were not paid, owing to a difference of opinion as to the fund out of which the payment should be made. It was supposed by some, that the payment should be made by the Secretary of Treasury directly; and by others, by the Secretary of State; and from that difference of opinion, growing out of the peculiar condition of facts, you were not paid. Your claim was undoubtedly just. Your despatches contained the announcement of the communication of the annexation of Texas, and the delivery of the public property accordingly."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

JOSEPH H. D. BOWMAR.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of a bill for the relief of Joseph H. D. Bowmar.

Mr. FELCH. It seems to me there is a radical difficulty in this bill, and one which I do not see how we can surmount. The title to the land referred to by the bill, is evidently disposed of by the United States under the act referred to in the bill—an act in favor of a man by the name of Carson. Carson had settled upon the sixteenth section, as will be seen by a reference to the papers presented in this case, and by a provision of an act of Congress, to which reference is made, he was entitled to, or permitted to obtain a title, to the sixteenth section; but a provision was made at the same time, that the township or State should be entitled to locate another section instead of that thus disposed of. This twenty-seventh lot, being a fractional section, was disposed of and abandoned. It was selected in lieu of the school land, and that selection was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and, subsequently, in passing the act of March 3d, 1849, in favor of Carson, an express provision was made in that act, by which the selection was to be confirmed to the State authorities for school land.

Now, if I understand this subject, and the legislation in regard to it, this property did, by the act of March 3d, 1849, become absolutely the property of the State or township, according to their regulations in relation to school lands; and the title became vested in the State or township.

Now, can the United States, by an act of Congress or otherwise, divest that title to the land? I cannot see how it can be done. It is not only vested in the State authorities by the ordinary operation of the law, and by a selection and confirmation, but by a special act of Congress. I think we cannot, by any act of Congress, divest that title, and give it to the individual who makes this application. It is true that the papers in this case show that the applicant did claim the right of preemption, and that that claim was recognized by the Department at one time. But all this, it appears, was subsequent to the passage of the act of 1849, and that the Department acted under a misapprehension of the existence of that law. At all events, they had not the power to grant a duplicate, or give a patent, or do anything by which they could dispose of this land for any purpose but school purposes, it having then become the property of the State. Having ascertained that this was the true state of the case, they recalled the authority which they had given the party to claim his preemption right, putting the matter precisely where the law had put it.

Mr. DOWNS. The difficulty does not exist, because the circumstances are not precisely as the Senator from Michigan states them. This was not, in fact, a school lot of land at the time the bill was passed in favor of Carson, although Congress thought it was; and it was not for this reason: Before that act was passed—and not after, as has been stated—but of which Congress knew nothing, Bowmar, in attempting to perfect his entry, finding difficulties because this was a school section, applied to the Secretary of the Treasury to have this lot released, on the ground that, by mistake, more land had been reserved for that township than it was entitled to; and on the hearing of the case, Mr. Walker, who had then charge of that department, now known as the Department of the Interior, so decided; and he released this lot from the school location, so that it became public land, and he permitted him to proceed with his entry. After that time, a law was passed for the benefit of Carson, without Congress knowing anything of the matter, authorizing him to sell this section after obtaining the consent of the people of the town. It seems to me, therefore, that the objection of the Senator from Michigan does not apply. The right was not vested in this man; and Congress, in passing the act in favor of Carson, was under a mistake as to the facts. This bill does not propose to deprive the township of its land; but even if it were so, unless I am mistaken, there is a provision in the bill to the effect that this act shall be consummated only with the consent of the proper authority of the township or State, as the case may be. I should like the Secretary to read that part of the bill which has that clause in it.

The Secretary read the clause, as follows:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to reduce the quantity of land to which said township is entitled by law."

Mr. DOWNS. It is clear that this does not apply to any rights vesting in the township whatever. The objection of the Senator from Michigan is, that this act deprives the people of the township of a grant of land. How can that be, when the bill expressly says that it shall deprive them of nothing? I should like to know how that can be. The principal argument of the gentleman is, that you cannot do this, because it divests the township. The bill says that it does no such thing; it expressly disclaims it. The case is clear. I do not wish to go into the argument again; but I think it is clearly competent for Congress to correct an error of fact, on which they acted in passing the bill for Carson. Carson may have his rights. Nobody disputes that. If they are interfered with, they may be recovered in the courts; but as the matter now stands, this act places the parties upon an equal footing, and their respective rights must necessarily be determined by the local courts of justice.

Mr. FELCH. It seems to me that that provision does not have the effect which the Senator seems to suppose. What is the proviso? The bill proposes to take away the land, divesting the title to that to which I think the title is as clear and perfect as any act of legislation can make it. It proposes to take away land. The Senator says it takes away no land; or, in other words, that it permits them to hold their own land, and perhaps the idea may be, that they may have the opportunity of locating a similar quantity elsewhere. But that is not definite. It is manifest that if anything is effected by this bill, it is to give the lands of Carson to the State. If the title to the land is in the State or township, then it is perfectly manifest that that is a thing which we have not the power to do. If the Senator will look into the papers, he will find, I think, that he has mistaken the facts in the case. The claim was not presented by Bowmar anterior to the time when the title was vested in the State authority for school land, but subsequent to it. The Carson act has this proviso:

"And be it further enacted, That the selection heretofore made under the direction and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, of lots numbered twenty-five, twenty-six and twenty-seven, in said townships, nineteen for the use of schools, in lieu of lot sixteen, be, and the same is hereby confirmed."

The Senator seems to suppose that Bowmar had acquired rights anterior to that time. Here are the dates: On the 3d of March, 1849, this act was passed, which establishes the title of the State or township absolutely. Now, the party makes application for the right of preemption to the land, at the local land office, and he is refused. He then makes his application to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury admits the propriety of the claim, and instructs them to permit him to make the entry. He was evidently ignorant of this act. This order was made on the 4th of July, 1849, after the act which confirmed the title to it as school land, and all these provisions were subsequent to that act. The attention of the Secretary of the Treasury was then called to this act, by which this land was disposed of, showing that he had not the power to dispose of it again, or grant a preemption right. On ascertaining this fact, the whole matter was referred back to the land office in the district where the land lay, with instructions not to permit the location to be made, inasmuch as the land had been already disposed of, and it was not in the power of Congress or any department to divest the title or give the land to this man or any other.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DOWNS. I hope the gentleman will not persist in that motion. There is a fact in the case which I find is somewhat different from what I supposed it to be as to date, I certainly understood the matter to be as I have stated it.

Mr. ATCHISON. Well, if it will suit the Senator from Louisiana better, I will move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. DOWNS. I will agree to that. The motion was accordingly decided in the affirmative.

W. C. EASTON.

The Senate next proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of a bill for the relief of W. C. Easton. The bill provides for the payment to the claimant of a sum due for services as clerk in the office of the Commissary General of Subsistence, from June 1st, 1823, to March 2d, 1827, when such services were necessary to the business of that office, but for which provision had not been made by law.

Mr. ATCHISON. I would like to hear the report read.

The report was read accordingly, from which it appeared that the case had been before Congress for many years at different times; that as far back as December 30th, 1834, a favorable report upon it was made to the Senate from the Committee of Claims; and subsequently, January 2d, 1845, a bill for the relief of the petitioner was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs; that during the time from June 1st, 1823, to March 2d, 1827, he was paid out of the contingent fund of the office at the rate of $420 per annum, the lowest salary of clerks in the Executive offices being at that time $800.

The facts in detail, of which the foregoing statement is a summary, are set forth in the petition and confirmed by two letters of General Gibson, of December 19, 1834, and January 13, 1835. These letters are appended to and make a part of the report, and the committee state that from a careful examination of the case they are of opinion that the claim of the petitioner is an equitable one, and that he is clearly and fully entitled to the compensation he has so long asked at the hands of Congress.

The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment; and the question being on ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading, the yeas appeared to prevail.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that the facts set forth in that report, if Senators had listened carefully to it, are sufficient to satisfy every mind of the merits of the bill. The case is one which the committee considered so plain and clear that they did not hesitate. It has been reported favorably upon three or four times, and I never heard any opposition to it. It is a bill to allow a clerk in the commissary general's department an increase of salary, which the department were not enabled at the time the service was rendered to make. The commissary general, in his letters, state the reasons why this person is entitled to it. He was an extra clerk at a time when the public business required his services, and when there was not money enough in the control of the department to give him a compensation upon which he could live. His services were indispensable, and the commissary general employed him with the understanding on his part that he should wait for his compensation until by some legislative act a provision was made to pay him. If Senators have not looked into the matter, I would ask for the reading of General Gibson's letters.

Mr. ATCHISON. Perhaps there may be some equity in this claim, and I withdraw my objections to the passage of the bill.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider "a bill for the relief of St. John's Church, in the city of Washington."

This was a bill reported by the Committee for the District of Columbia, providing that the lot of ground now used as a burial ground for St. John's Church, in the city of Washington, occupying the sole square (No. 276) situated near the northern limits of the city, and which the late President Monroe permitted to be used by the said church as a place of sepulture for their dead, should be conveyed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings to the trustees of the church aforesaid, and that the sum of $200 be paid to the rector of said church out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BAYARD. When that bill was called up last Friday, being reported by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] it was postponed until to-day. There is no report in the case, as I believe, and it was postponed in consequence of the absence of that Senator. I made a motion to strike out the appropriation of $200, and I shall persist in that motion unless some satisfactory explanation shall be given why the sum should be appropriated. Unless I can have that explanation, I shall move the postponement of the further consideration of the bill until Friday next.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will ask for the reading of the memorial in this case. I think that is the best explanation that can be given.

The memorial was accordingly read. It set forth that the lot of ground now used as a place of sepulture by the congregation of St. John's Church, occupying the square mentioned above, was allowed by the late President Monroe, by request of the late rector of the church, the Rev. Mr. Hawley, with the understanding, that while it might be occupied for this purpose, it should be occupied free of all cost; that it had been so used for a period of thirty years, and that the remains of many persons had been interred in it; that it had not been used as a source of revenue to the church, but on the contrary, that it had been a source of expense; that in 1849, the late Commissioner of Public Buildings, [Mr. Mudd,] on finding the square so occupied, and believing it to be his duty to make some movement to obtain its value, the land not having been paid for, demanded the sum of $200, intimating that if that sum was not paid, he would feel himself compelled to dispose of the square at public auction; that under these circumstances, as the memorialists had no evidence of the permission so to occupy this land the amount of $200 was paid in 1849, although they believed that their quiet and undisturbed possession for the last thirty years would have given them a title if any limitation run against the Government. They therefore prayed that the Commissioner of Public Buildings should be authorized and directed to make a deed of conveyance of said land, and to refund the sum of $200, paid in 1849.

Mr. SHIELDS. I perceive that there is a little mistake in the bill. It is represented that this land was given by President Madison. The grant was made by President Monroe, and I therefore move to amend the bill by striking out the word "Madison," and inserting the word "Monroe."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to strike out the appropriation of $200. I cannot see the basis on which the grant is to be made. If the parties acquired any title to the land they do not show it. I am not aware that even the sanction of the President of the United States is good enough to confer a title. It seems that in after years, an officer of the Government, whose duty it was to attend to it, claimed and received $200. They do not ask the repayment of the money. I have no objection to making a grant of the land. I would not disturb the remains of their dead, or take away the possession of a burying-ground which they have occupied for so long a time; but I do object to the repayment of the $200.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator is mistaken. They do ask for the repayment of the money.

Mr. BAYARD. I think not.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill provides for the refunding of the sum of $200 which they paid.

Mr. BAYARD. Whether they ask for it or not, I am unable to see the principle on which we should grant it; and I move to strike it out. I would be unwilling to disturb the possession of the ground which they have so long occupied and appropriated for the burial of their dead; but in the whole statement I do not see any legitimate evidence to show that the parties took the property on a grant from the United States; and if you make grants of this sort to one religious society, you may make them to others, and that to a very different extent. I cannot see any principle on which this money should be refunded, and therefore I have moved to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will just state, as it was stated to me, that this lot having been given for a cemetery to this church, by President Monroe, they never expected to be called on to pay for it. At the time it was given, there was no legislation to confirm the grant. Recently the Commissioner of Public Buildings determined to sell this lot among others; and, therefore, to save it, under the pressure of this necessity, they paid $200. I think that, as the land was given in this way, the President having done it so long ago, and since they never expected to be called on to pay it, they should have this sum refunded. It is a very small amount which they ask to have reimbursed; but if the Senate think it should not be paid, I must let it go.

Mr. HALE. Let them have it. Let them have it.

Mr. BAYARD. Although the sum is small, the principle involved is one of great importance. I would not vote to sanction the appropriation of any public property, by any President of the United States, except, as in this case, where the occupation of the land has been for a purpose with which the natural feelings of man would make them indisposed to interfere. But, as regards the returning of this sum of money, that principle does not apply. It seems to me, that by your vote to refund this money, you are sanctioning the principle that the President of the United States may, of his own volition, without the sanction of Congress, appropriate the public property of the nation. I cannot sanction any such principle as that, except in very extraordinary circumstances indeed.

Mr. HALE. If I understand this question, it is this: Certain persons, at a period about thirty years ago, had permission to occupy a certain piece of land for a burying-place, and having used it for thirty years, the Commissioner of Public Buildings called upon them to pay for the land, and, under a threat that the place where their dead reposed would be sold, they paid $200 to him. The object of this bill is to confirm the title of the lands, and to give back the sum of money which they paid under the circumstances which I have stated. I ask, if there is any Senator here who wants to speculate upon the feelings of those whose friends are reposing in this place of burial? Would we not rather confirm the grant to them, that they may continue to occupy this piece of land, given to them thirty years ago, than to have the Commissioner put an auctioneer into that burial-place, to sell it to the highest bidder. These persons have paid $200, and the question is, will we refund the money, or will we keep in our hands this price which they paid for a place of repose for their dead? It seems to me, to all practical purposes, it was given them for a burial-place, more than thirty years ago; and they, having thus occupied it for that length of time, the Commissioner comes without any authority, except the general authority of law, and threatens to dispossess them. They, under that threat, paid the sum of $200. This being the state of the case, as I suppose, I cannot have any hesitancy, and I do not believe the Senate will, in voting to pass this bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is materially the state of the case, but I will state that the Commissioner of Public Buildings only acted under the general law. I do not think that he did this by way of threat. He felt it his duty to sell this land by the same regulations by which he was required to sell lands generally. It will be seen from the accompanying papers that this is a small, insignificant lot, that it is away from the city, and worth very little. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] has stated materially the facts of the case. There was no attempt, sir, I believe, on the part of President Monroe to exercise any undue power. He only gave permission to those people—he having charge of the property—to use it in that way, which it was quite competent for him to do under the laws as they then existed. But he could give no title, and the law which was passed afterwards in relation to the sale of the lands for the benefit of the city, included this lot with the others. The land was afterwards sold to them, as it appears, by the Commissioner of Public Buildings; and the only question is, whether you will give them the money back or not.

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot understand how the Senator from Illinois can reconcile the proposition that this was not an improper exercise of power on the part of the President of the United States. I concede that he has charge of the lands for temporary purposes; but this occupation was a permanent occupation intended to be in the nature of a grant. By what authority does the President of the United States grant the public lands to any one? If he may do it for one purpose, he may do it for another. I admit that what was said by the Senator from New Hampshire will apply to that portion of the bill which relates to the title to the land, so that they may not be hereafter disturbed; but it does not apply to the repayment of this money which was paid to the Commissioner of Public Buildings, who was acting under a general direction to sell the land if the parties did not pay for it. On that ground I am not disposed to vote for the bill without the amendment I have proposed; and unless that amendment is adopted I shall vote against it, as I cannot sanction the principle that the President of the United States may so dispose of the public property; and it will not do to say that he gave permission to occupy the land, covering under that permission the title to the land. The amount may be a small one, but the principle involved is important, and the precedent one which may be abused; and for that reason I am not willing to sanction it.

Mr. RIETT. It appears to me that this grant would be vindicated by the legislation of Congress upon it. Certainly the President of the United States had a right to allow a temporary occupation of the land. It is true that, by long usage, it might be considered as a permanent right. And if he had allowed every religious denomination in the city to take a portion of the public land for the purposes of burial, I think we should ratify what he did. I know very well the locality of this burial place, and I do not consider it of much value. By making a point about it at all, and the fact that we do legislate upon it, is a sufficient vindication of the law. This is quite a small matter, and I hope the Senate will grant the sum asked for.

Mr. BAYARD. It is true it is a small matter; but I never consider a principle a small matter, however the Senator from South Carolina may regard it. I think the principle in this case is an important one.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not adopted.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

BRYAN CALLAGHAN.

The bill for the relief of Bryan Callaghan was then read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Bryan Callaghan the sum to which he may be found justly entitled as the reasonable value of merchandise belonging to him, and destroyed by order of officers of the Army of the United States, in 1846, on the Rio Grande, to prevent the said merchandise from falling into the hands of the enemy, or which were used by the forces of the United States, not exceeding the sum of $16,194 50.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was accordingly read, from which it appeared that, in the opinion of the committee, the case submitted by the petitioner established the following facts:

1. That Colonel Harney was in command of a portion of the United States troops at San Antonio, Texas, in July, 1846, and that he was without the necessary supplies of money and provisions for the subsistence of the force under his command.
2. That in an expedition which started from San Antonio to the Rio Grande, on the 23d of July, 1846, Colonel Harney found it necessary to contract, and did contract, with the petitioner, a resident merchant of San Antonio, to accompany the expedition with his stock of merchandise, that from the proceeds of the sale thereof he might furnish his army with such supplies and money as was necessary for its subsistence.
3. That the goods of the claimant were, in accordance with this contract, delivered to and placed under the control of Lieutenant D. G. Rogers, the acting quartermaster of the force engaged in this expedition, and were in part used in providing supplies, &c.
4. That when this expedition subsequently retired from the Rio Grande and returned to San Antonio, the residue of the goods, which had been surrendered to the quartermaster, were destroyed by the orders of the officer in command, to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy.
5. That the value of the goods originally delivered by the applicant to the quartermaster was $25,577 50; and that the value of that portion destroyed by the order of the United States officer, and for which the petitioner has received no compensation, was $16,194 50.

The committee, therefore, believing the facts above enumerated to be sustained by the testimony, had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the claimant was justly entitled to be paid the sum claimed as the value of his goods destroyed, and they recommended the passage to provide for the payment of the same.

Mr. BORLAND. This bill was discussed and passed at a former session of the Senate. For reasons which seemed to me to be sufficient, I opposed it then. For the same reasons, I feel bound to oppose it now.

The grounds of my opposition are these: First. The goods for which this payment is claimed, were not in the possession of the United States, nor upon the banks of the Rio Grande where they were destroyed, by any such authority or for any such legitimate purpose as to make the Government responsible for their loss or destruction. Second. It is not in proper or sufficient evidence before us, that they were destroyed by proper authority, or for a necessary purpose. Third. Had sufficient time and warning to remove them beyond the danger, upon pretence of which they are alleged to have been destroyed.

I said these goods were not properly upon the Rio Grande—that is, to the extent of making the United States responsible for them. The expedition, with which they were carried there, was an unauthorized one. Not only unauthorized, but was regarded by the commanding general as so improper that, as soon as he received intelligence of it, he countermanded it, ordered the troops back to San Antonio, and placed the leader of it, Colonel Harney, under arrest. Mr. Callaghan, it seems, and as there is no doubt, accompanied this expedition, and carried his goods by authority, by order, if you will, of Colonel Harney. But as the expedition itself was an authorized one, as Colonel Harney himself, had no right to engage in it, and no authority to make such an arrangement as it is alleged he did make with Mr. Callaghan, or give him such an order, I say that the goods in question were not properly in possession of the United States, were not legitimately under the care and protection of the Government—certainly not to such an extent as to create any Government responsibility for them, or to make their loss the just foundation of a claim upon us for payment.

Heretofore, it seems to have been considered a settled principle—at least it has been a governing rule in this body, since I have been a member of it—in deciding upon claims of this character, that, to establish their validity, it must be proved first that the appropriation or destruction of the property was by the lawful act of an officer or agent of the Government; and second, that such appropriation was proper for, or at least a conversion to, the use and service of the Government; or that such destruction was necessary and proper to prevent the property from falling into the hands of the enemy, to their benefit and our injury. Several cases within my recollection, and of recent occurrence, have been decided upon the principle thus expressed.

But, supposing Mr. Callaghan, with his goods, to have been, by legitimate authority, and under lawful orders, on the banks of the Rio Grande in the first instance; and that if, while so there, his goods had been so destroyed, he would have a valid claim against the Government for their value. It does not follow that he had any such claim at the time, or under the circumstances, when his goods were actually destroyed. It is in proof, I think—at any rate it is true—that he remained at the Rio Grande after he knew that the expedition had been countermanded; after he knew that, for engaging in it, Colonel Harney had been arrested; and after that officer, and all the regular troops under his command, had returned to San Antonio. I say, with this knowledge, and after all this, he remained—voluntarily remained, along with some two or three companies of Texan volunteers, at the Rio Grande. Now, if any one shall say (as I have admitted for the argument) that the expedition was lawful from the beginning, and that Mr. Callaghan, with his goods, was there by the legitimate authority, and upon the just responsibility of the Government, and that if his goods had then been destroyed, he would be entitled to compensation for them; it cannot be said that this continued to be the case after the expedition was countermanded—after it was ordered back to San Antonio—after its commander (under whose authority alone Mr. Callaghan claims to have acted) was deprived of command and placed under arrest. If he was under military orders, as he claims to have been, and so readily and implicitly obeyed, under Colonel Harney to go to the Rio Grande, he was bound, as was every officer and every soldier of the whole expedition—whether regular or volunteer—to obey the countermanding order; to return to San Antonio; and every day, every hour, that he remained there after General Taylor's order was given for the expedition to return, was a disobedience of orders, and a violation of the law. For no such act as this could he claim compensation as service to the Government; for no loss incurred by him as a consequence of such disobedience of orders, or violation of the law, can he claim compensation at our hands. Yet he did so remain at the Rio Grande several days—perhaps a week. I do not state this from mere hearsay, but in part from personal observation, and from the familiar history of the time. About the time Colonel Harney returned from the Rio Grande under arrest, I was at San Antonio; and my impressions of all the circumstances of this somewhat remarkable case, which made some noise, were very strong at the time, and are still quite distinct. Colonel Harney returned promptly, and yielded up his command in obedience to the order of his superior in command. So did all the regular troops return. The Texan volunteers, and Mr. Callaghan, with his goods, disregarded the order, and remained at the Rio Grande. Why they did so is unexplained. That they did so improperly and unlawfully, cannot be denied. And so long did this disobedience continue, that the officer who succeeded Colonel Harney in the same rank, went expressly to repeat the order, that the remaining Texan volunteers should remain no longer, but return at once to San Antonio. Not until then, did they or Callaghan return; and then it was that they burned his goods—for the purpose, as alleged, of preventing their falling into the hands of the enemy. It does seem to me that such circumstances furnish a strange, a most extraordinary foundation for a claim. Its very inception is connected with and characterized by an expedition, as has been seen, wholly unauthorized, and deemed so improper as not only to be countermanded, but to subject its leader to deprivation of command. Individually, I pass no opinion upon the inherent merits of this part of the case, or of the persons implicated. I merely state the facts, and assume them as the legitimate basis of my argument.

I here repeat the inquiry, and it is suggestive and significant, why did Mr. Callaghan remain at the Rio Grande after the order was given, and the main body of the troops, in obedience to it, had returned to San Antonio? He had obeyed the original order of Colonel Harney, which required him to take his goods, and hasten to the Rio Grande, where he and they might be exposed to some danger from the enemy. Why not obey the order of General Taylor, which was certainly not less lawful, nor harder in its terms, when that would have carried him and his goods back to San Antonio in safety, and under proper protection? If his claim to compensation had its origin, as he alleges, in his obedience to the orders of Colonel Harney, supposing those orders to have been lawful, its validity could only have continued, and its consummation and present allowance can only be justified, by continued obedience to orders equally lawful, in consequence of which the loss he complains of shall be proved.

It is said in the memorial, and set forth in the report, I believe, that these goods, at setting out upon the expedition, were delivered to a lieutenant of the army, acting as quartermaster. This, however, only embraces the time of the march to the Rio Grande, and while Colonel Harney and his regulars, of which this lieutenant was one, remained on that river. But it is not shown, nor alleged, for it is not the fact, that this acting quartermaster continued in possession and charge of the goods when the expedition was ordered to return. He returned to San Antonio with the other troops, leaving Mr. Callaghan with his goods, who chose to remain, in disobedience of orders, at the Rio Grande.

But, Mr. President, it is alleged that these goods were destroyed by order of the commanding officer. Now, where is that order? And that their destruction was necessary to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy, where is the evidence of that necessity? This order may have been given—this necessity may have existed; but, sir, the decision of the question does not depend upon such a denial of an alleged fact. To maintain the claim, both the order and the necessity for it, must be shown. Now, sir, I do deny that either has been shown. Certainly neither has been shown by such evidence as has, always before, been required to maintain any claim of this character before this Senate.

Mr. President, to my mind this case, more strikingly than any I have noticed for a long time, shows the propriety, the necessity, indeed, of having a Board of Accounts, or some sort of tribunal separate from Congress, to adjudicate private claims, if we would, at the same time, do justice to individuals and protect the Treasury. All claims come before us, and are necessarily passed upon by our committees upon ex parte testimony. We get, we can only get, one side of the question. The claimant comes forward, as Mr. Callaghan in this case, with all that can be said or shown in support of his claim. He, of course, says nothing, shows nothing, on the other side which could by possibility militate against his claim. Everything but what is favorable to him is, of course, carefully excluded. No one is here or before the committees to suggest objections, to find out testimony, or to cross-examine witnesses, in favor of the Government. Indeed, there are no witnesses to be cross-examined; ex parte affidavits, depositions without notice, as it were, being the only witnesses before us; and there they stand, fixed, dogged, and impracticable. Suppose, sir, proceedings in the courts of the country, involving rights and interests, as between citizens, were conducted in a similar manner, where one side only of a case was heard, what chance of justice would there be?

One more word about that order for the destruction of the goods. I again ask, where is it? Sir, this inquiry is more significant now than formerly, for the reason, that in the discussion of this very point, at a former session, the same inquiry was made. It was not answered then; and, although a sufficient time to produce it has elapsed, if it was in existence, it is not here yet. I do not think it ever will be produced, for I do not think it exists, or ever did exist, in such a form as would sustain this claim.

Such, Mr. President, are the grounds of my opposition to the passage of this bill. Upon them, I shall vote against it.

Mr. PRATT. The proposition of the Senator from Arkansas, if right, should of course prevent the passage of the bill which is before the Senate. He assumes that we are to look behind the order of the officer in command of the forces; and that we are to ascertain whether that officer was authorized to give the command; and that if he was not authorized the Government is not bound by the orders of that officer. Now, Colonel Harney was in command of the forces at San Antonio. He undertook to march to the Rio Grande. He had not sufficient provisions to carry the army under his command to that point. He took the goods of this merchant, placed them in charge of one of the United States Commissioners, carried them with his army to the Rio Grande, and used them for the support of the army whilst it was going there, and whilst it was there. These facts are conceded by the Senator from Arkansas; but he says that inasmuch as Colonel Harney was unauthorized by General Taylor to make that march—that because he had no such authority, the individual citizen, whose goods were so taken for the use of the army under the command of Colonel Harney, ought not to be paid. I think the Senate are not prepared to support that proposition.

The Senator is mistaken in regard to one of the facts upon which his argument is predicated. He asks why this merchant remained at the Rio Grande with his goods? Why did he not bring them away? Why he stayed there after Colonel Harney's retreat? He did return with Colonel Harney, and his goods were destroyed prior to the army, under the command of Colonel Harney, leaving the Rio Grande. They were destroyed because the American army at that point was not in sufficient force to resist the enemy, and to prevent the goods falling into their hands. The wagons which carried them there being wanted to carry the materials of war back again, they were unable to carry the goods, and the goods were destroyed. My friend from Texas [Mr. Rusk] will read, if it is desired, the certificates of the officers, stating the facts that are set forth in the report of the committee. These facts, I understand, are conceded to be correct by the Senator from Arkansas. They are, in the first place, that the American forces were under the command of Colonel Harney; in the next place, that the goods of this man were taken possession of by order of Colonel Harney, and placed in the possession of one of the United States commissioners; that they were taken to the Rio Grande—part of them was used by the soldiers of the United States, and the other part was destroyed by order of the commanding officer to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy. The only point upon which the claim is resisted is, that Colonel Harney was unauthorized to make this march by General Taylor, who was in command of that division of the army, and who was some two hundred miles from him. I cannot concede, nor do I believe that the Senate will support the proposition, that where an officer of the United States Government, in the separate command of the United States forces, takes possession of individual property for the support of the forces under his command, uses a part of it, and burns the rest to prevent it getting into the hands of the enemy—that the individual from whom they were taken is not to be compensated because the officer has transcended the authority that is given him. I think, therefore, that the bill ought to pass. I am unable to continue the debate, owing to a cold which I have, and to give the facts and arguments as I otherwise would have done.

Mr. BAYARD. I will ask the Senator from Maryland a question. I understand him to say that the goods were not destroyed until after Colonel Harney and the regular forces had left the Rio Grande. There is a question of fact. The report, I suppose, states that it was done by order of the officer in command. Was it, then, an officer of the United States Army who was left in command, or was it not? The Senator from Arkansas says that it was an officer in the Texas volunteers, and that they were destroyed after the troops of the United States left. If the goods were destroyed after the troops left, I do not see why compensation should be made; but if on the contrary they were destroyed at the time of withdrawing the troops of the United States, or before they were withdrawn, I think the compensation ought to be made.

Mr. PRATT. They were destroyed by order of an officer of the United States Government. They were placed in possession of Lieutenant Rogers, who was acting commissary of the command under Colonel Harney.

Mr. SHIELDS. Perhaps I may relieve the gentleman by stating what I learned in regard to this matter. I am well acquainted with the claimant. I saw him at the place where his goods were destroyed. I did not see the destruction, of course. That preceded my arrival there. I joined General Wool at that place. This expedition had preceded General Wool's expedition; and what I learned from Colonel Harney and this gentleman himself (we occupied the same house at the same time) was this, that Col. Harney did take possession of the goods, and took this man along with him; but when he was compelled to fall back, he left the goods in the custody of one of his officers, with instructions that if the Mexicans should press upon him: if he was compelled to abandon his position too suddenly, he should destroy the goods rather than let them fall into the hands of the enemy. The officer, in pursuance of that order, burned the goods—I saw the place where they were burned—so that the man himself, of course, had no option about it. If the goods had not been destroyed they would have fallen into the hands of the Mexicans. I did not hear the argument of the Senator from Arkansas, but I believe his objection to this bill is, that Colonel Harney's expedition was not authorized.

Mr. BORLAND. That was one ground of objection.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is true. He went there without authority. I happened to be at Monterey at the time, and heard General Taylor say some hard things about it. But if it had been successful—and, indeed, it was in the first instance, the Mexicans being driven away—Colonel Harney would have received a great deal of credit. But that has nothing to do with this man, as I understand. Colonel Harney was in the United States service; he acted on his own risk in that matter; and although he did not go in accordance with orders, so far as I understand it, he had not disobeyed any orders. But Colonel Harney took the goods from Callaghan, and kept them with him. I know Colonel Harney, and probably others here do. He was one of those men who would not give Callaghan time to raise any question about his conduct. He seized these goods and kept them there. They were destroyed by his orders. Under these circumstances, I will ask any honorable Senator whether that man is not entitled to compensation? At the time, if Colonel Harney had had the power he would have paid him instantly, and so would any of us. But he had no authority to do so. This man's goods were destroyed by the order of an officer of the United States. The only question is, will the United States indemnify him for the loss of them?

Mr. BORLAND. There seems to be a difference of opinion here as to a fact, about which there can be no doubt, I apprehend, when I call attention to it. I understand the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Pratt] to say that these goods were destroyed by order of Colonel Harney, before he left the Rio Grande.

Mr. PRATT. Oh, no; by an officer of the Government, not by Colonel Harney.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I misunderstood the Senator. The fact is, the goods were not destroyed until some time after Colonel Harney had returned to San Antonio. Now, sir, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Shields] has stated some circumstances of his personal knowledge, it may not be improper for me to state some from my own, as it so happened that I was at San Antonio about the time of these occurrences, and before Mr. Callaghan's goods were destroyed at the Rio Grande. I think it is a fact of my personal knowledge, that Mr. Callaghan did not return from the Rio Grande until some time after Colonel Harney's return, and until after the goods had been destroyed. I well remember it was said in San Antonio at the time, that Mr. Callaghan had aided in setting fire to the goods. I mention this as a fact—not to censure him; for if it was right to destroy the goods at all, it was not wrong in him to aid in their destruction. Again, I think it is a fact of my own knowledge, that no officer of the regular Army remained at the Rio Grande with the Texan volunteers, after Colonel Harney and the regular troops returned. The goods being left behind, and Mr. Callaghan with them, the presumption is, as I doubt not the fact was, that they were in his charge and possession—that is, he remained there voluntarily with them, for purposes of his own, (surely he was subversive no public interest,) and consequently on his own responsibility, and at his own risk. It is said that Captain Cady, the senior captain of the Texan volunteers that remained at the Rio Grande, who commanded after Colonel Harney returned, gave the order to burn the goods. I do not question this. But I do deny the rightfulness of that order, as I deny the rightfulness of Captain Cady, Mr. Callaghan, or a single man of the expedition (even if they went there rightfully at first) remaining an hour after the order had been given to them to return.

Then, as to the want of transportation. I cannot understand how that want came about. When the expedition went out they had sufficient transportation, for they carried, besides all other necessities, Mr. Callaghan's $25,000 worth of goods. Now, were not the means of transporting this amount from San Antonio to the Rio Grande, sufficient to carry back again the reduced amount of $10,000? My opinion is, that there was not, and could not have been, any want of transportation. Indeed, I well remember it was said at the time that wagons were burnt, together with the goods; and I had supposed that their estimated value made a part of the $16,000 now claimed for loss. I may be mistaken in this, though such is my impression. I agree with the Senator from Illinois, that Colonel Harney was in the habit, not only of giving orders with decision, but of having them obeyed also. But that Mr. Callaghan was carried along, volens, by force, and under the stringent operation of a military order, and that he did not wish to go, or was afraid to go, is not sustained by the circumstances of this case. He was an old trader in the Mexican country, across the Rio Grande, and in the constant habit of traveling backwards and forwards from San Antonio. He was interested in working one of the Mexican silver mines, perhaps that of Santa Rosa. He was in the constant habit of trading backwards and forwards; and he kept a stock of goods suited to that business. One reason, perhaps the controlling one, why Colonel Harney made arrangements with him to go with the expedition, was the fact that he could carry goods which were suited to the Mexicans; and understanding their language, being familiar with their character and habits, and experienced in trading with them, he would be able to render essential service to the expedition in procuring supplies; while he was, at the same time, serving himself by exchanging his goods for Mexican forage and provisions, which he was selling to the troops, and, upon the operation, realizing a handsome profit.

Mr. SHIELDS. As far as I understand the Senator, his objection turns on the fact whether Colonel Harney authorized the destruction of the goods.

Mr. BORLAND. If the Senator had been in the Chamber when I made my first remarks, he would have heard the three grounds of my objection. The first is, that the expedition was an unauthorized one. The next is, that Mr. Callaghan ought not to have remained upon the banks of the Rio Grande after the expedition had been ordered back, and after the main body of the troops had returned to San Antonio. He ought not to have remained there beyond their protection, when he had the opportunity and means of getting back to San Antonio in good time. If the circumstances were such as to require the expedition to fall back, he should have returned. My third ground of objection is, the want of what I regard, and what I understand the Senate has heretofore regarded, as competent proof of the order, by proper authority, to destroy the goods; or of the necessity of that order, supposing it to have been given.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have already stated what I heard those gentlemen say. I hope the gentleman does not pretend to say that I stated that incorrectly. They told me—I am not responsible for what they said, they may have told me falsehoods—that Colonel Harney had gone there, had pressed the goods, had taken possession of them; and when he left that place, had taken the wagons, carried off the residue, and left these goods, with instructions that if the Mexicans came and forced them to abandon their position, the man whom he left there in charge of the goods—not Callaghan—should destroy them. I do not suppose the gentleman pretends to say that I did not hear these statements.

Mr. BORLAND. I have said nothing at all about the Senator's statements. It seems to me he has introduced that unnecessarily. I am not questioning his statements upon any point; but I am stating the circumstances which satisfy my mind that the goods were not destroyed under the circumstances alleged in the memorial, in such a way, and by such authority as would entitle the petitioner to relief. I make no question of the Senator's statements, nor those of any other Senator upon the floor, or elsewhere; but I do question the validity of this claim most emphatically; and have presented the facts and considerations which, in my opinion, do utterly destroy the only foundations upon which it can pretend to rest.

I may be wrong in the positions I have taken. If so, then the claim should be allowed. If the Senate shall be satisfied, first, that the expedition was an authorized one, that Colonel Harney had a right to make it, and to incur all the expenses and responsibilities which it involved, and that those responsibilities justly fall now upon this Government, then that ground of my objection is—to your mind, not mine—removed. Next, if you shall be satisfied that Mr. Callaghan rightfully remained upon the banks of the Rio Grande after the order, from unquestionable authority, had been given for the whole expedition to return to San Antonio, and after the greater part had so returned, and Colonel Harney with it, then the second ground of my objection is—to your mind, not mine—removed. And third, if it is satisfactorily proved to the Senate that the destruction of these goods was necessary to the public service, and that the order under which they were destroyed was from a lawful source, and really given, then that objection is—to your mind, not mine—removed.

Now, sir, how far does this responsibility of the Government extend, in the opinion of Senators? The ill luck which Mr. Callaghan experienced in this famous expedition, did not at all deter him from a repetition of his trading excursions into the Mexican country, just beyond the Rio Grande. It was generally known that he made several after this time.

Mr. SHIELDS. Under protection.

Mr. BORLAND. If he had protection, I am not aware of it. I met him in the month of November, at Presidio, with no protection at all, save such as was afforded him by his little escort of Mexican servants whom he had to assist him, with a cargo of silver which he had obtained in the mines about Santa Rosa, in exchange for goods he had carried there, and in collection of debts. How many of these expeditions he made, I do not know; but I do know that the newspapers stated that in returning from one of them, he was fallen upon either by Mexicans or Indians, or some others, robbed of his goods, and nearly lost his life. Do Senators think he can claim payment for his losses on that occasion? I think he could, with as much lawful right as he does now for those sustained at the Rio Grande. Why not?

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I dislike to trouble the Senate, for I know that very frequently lengthened speaking on these small bills, instead of benefiting them, does them a positive injury. But there is some conflict here in regard to the testimony. The Senator from Arkansas says that this claim has been before the Senate for a long time. That is very true; but it has been up for action only twice. It was before the Senate several years ago, and was then discussed at length. The honorable Senator from Arkansas on that occasion showed just as much zeal as he has now shown to prevent the passage of the bill. Still, the bill was then passed by this body. I propose now to read some of the testimony in this case, as there seems to be some conflict in regard to it. I hope, therefore, the Senate will pardon me for reading from the testimony. I will first read the statement of Captain Cady, a gentleman under whose orders the goods were destroyed:

"In July, 1846, Colonel Harney ordered my company to escort Mr. Callaghan's goods to the Rio Grande. Mr. Callaghan told me that he was taking the goods to sell for the purpose of purchasing supplies for the commands—after we arrived at San Antonio. I know that Mr. Callaghan sold goods for provisions and forage, and turned them over to the quartermaster for the use of the troops. Colonel Harney ordered three companies of volunteers to remain on the left bank of the Rio Grande until further orders, and with the balance of the command marched for San Antonio, taking with him all the wagons but two. Mr. Callaghan furnished his own transportation, and had previously sent his carts to San Antonio.

"A few days after Colonel Harney left, we received an order from Colonel Young, commanding volunteers, directed to Captains Cady, Smith, and Evans, to repair immediately on receipt of the order to San Antonio with their commands. After receiving Colonel Young's order, we sent the quartermaster over the river to purchase provisions, and hire carts or pack mules for the purpose of transporting our provisions and Mr. Callaghan's goods to San Antonio. When our men were in the boat, and about returning, they were fired upon by a party of Mexicans, wounding several of our men. The enemy then destroyed our boat. At that time the river was unusually high, some five or six hundred yards wide, extremely swift, and impossible for us to ford or cross. After remaining on the left bank of the river several days, the river continuing to rise, our provisions getting scarce, we concluded to march to San Antonio pursuant to orders. As we had no means of transporting the public property or Mr. Callaghan's goods, a council of officers was called, who ordered the property to be destroyed to prevent them from falling into the hands of the enemy. Our two wagons could not more than carry the sick and provisions enough to last to San Antonio.

"D. C. CADY, Late Captain Texas Rangers.

"STATE OF TEXAS, County of Travis:

"Sworn to, and subscribed before me, this May 3d, A. D. 1850. In testimony whereof, I hereunto set my hand and the seal of the county court. J. MINER, Chief Justice."

That is the statement of Captain Cady, an officer in the service of the United States, who was left on the Rio Grande, by the command of Colonel Harney, and in possession of these goods. Colonel Harney's statement is corroborative of these facts. It is not necessary that I should trouble the Senate with reading it all. The concluding portion is as follows:

"Upon the return of the last troops to San Antonio, he disposed of a portion of said stock at the Rio Grande. A large portion of it, as I am informed and believe, was destroyed at said river, to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy. I made this contract, because I was satisfied that the funds and supplies of the quartermaster's department, at San Antonio, were not sufficient for the support of the expedition.

W. S. HARNEY,

"Colonel 2d dragoons of the United States Army."

I will next read the statement of D. G. Rogers, 2d lieutenant of dragoons, and assistant quartermaster:

"I do hereby certify, upon honor, that I accompanied the expedition under the command of Colonel Harney to the Rio Grande, and acted as quartermaster of the same. The forces composing said command, left San Antonio on the 2d day of July, 1846. Benjamin Callaghan, a resident merchant of San Antonio, accompanied said expedition with a large stock of merchandise, which said stock, and the proceeds of the sale thereof, was subject to my order, for the use and subsistence of the army, after the same had reached the Rio Grande. A part of said merchandise was disposed of by Mr. Callaghan at the Rio Grande, and the funds paid over to me. A large portion of the same was destroyed, by order of the officer remaining in command of the portion of the forces left at the Rio Grande, upon his return to San Antonio, to prevent the same falling into the hands of the enemy. I am satisfied, from my knowledge of the circumstances, that the invoice and account current exhibited by Mr. Callaghan against the quartermaster's department is correct, and that the balance of $16,194 50, as therein specified, is a just and valid charge against the quartermaster's department.

D. G. ROGERS,

"2d lieutenant of dragoons, A. A. Q. M."

"September 21, 1846."

In relation to the account current, the same officer says:

"I hereby certify, upon honor, that I have examined the within account, which is the same referred to in my certificate of this date, and find the balance therein stated, to be the amount of the merchandise destroyed by order of D. C. Cady, captain commanding at camp Junata, on the Rio Grande, on the 28th day of August, 1846.

D. G. ROGERS,

"2d lieutenant of dragoons, A. A. Q. M."

"September 21, 1846."

The facts of this case are shortly these. Colonel Harney—whatever quarrel there may be, and we have no evidence that it was an authorized expedition, except the opinion of gentlemen—was at a separate post. Every body knows Colonel Harney to be a bold man. He made an expedition from San Antonio to the Rio Grande. No body contends that he did that against orders; but he was ordered back by the commanding general. He left San Antonio with sufficient force, in my humble judgment, to whip all the Mexicans who would dare to come near him. Colonel Harney could not get along, could not support his forces without taking these goods with him; hence he made a contract with Callaghan, and the goods were turned over to the quartermaster to supply the troops with forage and provisions. After he got to the Rio Grande he received the order of the commanding general to return, and he did return with a part of his command, taking all the baggage wagons with him except two. When he returned to San Antonio he left Captain Evans, Captain Cady, and Captain Smith in possession at the Rio Grande, where they remained, and where these goods remained to support the troops. It seems that afterwards an order was received from Colonel Young, who had superseded Harney in command, directing these men to retire from the Rio Grande to San Antonio. For the purpose of doing so, they sent a detachment over the river to procure transportation, in order to take the goods to San Antonio. Coming back they were fired on by the Mexicans, and their boat was destroyed. There was no transportation on this side of the Rio Grande, and they could procure none on the other side. The goods were in the possession of the officer of the quartermaster's department, by no fault of Callaghan, at the instance of the colonel in command, and under the sanction of the quartermaster, who was responsible for his conduct in his accounts with the Department here. The troops were ordered by the commanding officer to return. They had but two baggage wagons, which were barely sufficient to transport the sick. What did they do, under these circumstances? They held a council of officers. I happen to know these gentlemen. Mr. Evans, who was for a long time a very creditable officer of our judiciary, and a man of talents, respectability, and courage, was one of them. Captain Smith, another one, was also distinguished for his courage and ability. I have not the pleasure of knowing Captain Cady personally, but I understand that he is very much of a gentleman. These three officers it seems, from the statement of Captain Cady, under oath, held a council to determine whether they should go off and leave Callaghan's goods to be taken by the enemy, and thus give them encouragement and support, or to abandon the place and destroy the goods. They chose the latter alternative, and destroyed the goods.

Now, if this does not make a legal and just claim against the Government of the United States, it is difficult for me to conceive what would make a just and legal claim. If this state of facts, and this testimony, does not justify the claim, I do not know what could. I might have read more testimony in corroboration of the points of the case, but I did not choose to delay the Senate on that subject.

Something has been said with regard to Mr. Callaghan. It is said that he is a Mexican trader. He is a gallant Irishman. I know him well; and I do not believe that he is capable of bringing before Congress, even upon his own unsupported statement, an improper account. He is a man who has had dealings with the Mexicans, and is very well liked by them. He is a man of high reputation as a merchant. I happen to know that after this time, when General Wool made his expedition into Mexico, Mr. Bryan Callaghan, without asking any pay out of the Treasury of the United States, went with General Wool, was his guide, went on at the head of the army with a fatigue party, and bridged the streams, so as not to delay the General when the safety of the army depended on his joining General Taylor immediately. He did all this under the impulses of a warm heart and a gallant disposition, and claimed no pay from the Government of the United States for it. If, under these circumstances, it is necessary to make a sacrifice of Bryan Callaghan to the amount of $16,000, be it so; but I must protest against it.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the vote is taken, I desire to say that it seems to me that the advocates of this bill undertake to put it on a foundation upon which it does not rest. If a bill were brought forward to be passed on grounds of gratitude to Mr. Callaghan, or on his personal merits as an individual, I should not have a word to say against it, because I concur in what has been said in his favor in this respect. I have cause to know that he is a very clever man. This is my opinion from some personal knowledge of him. For that reason I do not wish that this debate should give any such color or direction to my remarks as to reflect on Mr. Callaghan as an individual, or on any one else. I do not oppose the bill on that account. If that were a proper ground for it to stand upon, I should zealously support it; because personally I entertain for him very kind personal feelings, perhaps more kind than for any other man I met in Texas. My objection to this bill does not apply to the personal merits of Mr. Callaghan at all. The evidence which has been furnished in this case does not satisfy me that this claim rests on the only foundation on which the Senate of the United States or the other House of Congress have ever paid a claim. We may suppose that evidence to exist; but what the Senator from Texas has read does not meet the objection; that evidence, such as is usually required is not before us. The Senator read the vague and cautiously-worded statements of the officers, but he has not produced the order. He has not produced evidence or circumstances to show that the order ought to have been given, or the fact that it was given.

I find by one of the affidavits read by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] that my memory, in one particular, was sustained in point of time and of fact. It is as to the date of the burning of these goods at the Rio Grande—the 28th August, 1846. I arrived at San Antonio on the 25th of August, 1846; and early in September of that year I first saw Mr. Callaghan, and heard from him the first account which I did hear of the burning of his goods, on the Rio Grande. I knew, then, that he intended to bring forward a claim for them; and, if my memory serves me, I told him even then, that I did not think it was a valid claim. It was then talked about freely, and the impression on my mind was, that it had no foundation in justice. It cannot be considered a reflection on this gentleman, who does not think so, that he brings forward the claim. There is no question of honor involved in it. If we are to assume that it is evidence of dishonor for an individual to bring forward a claim when others think it unjust, we should brand some of the best men of the nation as dishonorable.

But that is not the point. The question is this: Was this claim established before us by testimony such as has always been required, and such as well-recognized and established principles require we should have, to warrant us in paying a claim of this character? This has not been done to my satisfaction. I therefore must vote against it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the executors of Robert Porterfield have leave to withdraw their petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. BRADBURY, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 19, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ACCOUNTS OF PROSPER M. WETMORE.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move to take up a message from the President of the United States, which was read a few days ago, and laid on the table for the purpose of being printed. I make the motion with a view of having the message referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a message from the President transmitting a copy of the report in relation to the accounts of Prosper M. Wetmore, late Navy agent in the city of New York. I do not desire to debate it now, but simply to move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I ask that all the communications on the Speaker's table may be taken up and referred.

Mr. ORR. This communication is not upon the Speaker's table. It was read and laid upon the table, and I simply ask now that it may be taken up and referred.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Well, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina objected to?

Mr. BROOKS. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know what is the purpose of the gentleman from Connecticut in moving to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. The House will remember that we have only until Tuesday to complete the deficiency bill, and if the object of the gentleman is to contend for to-day and to-morrow, why, I shall have to contend with him for both of those days. It is possible that, if the House would sit to-morrow, we might finish the deficiency bill by Tuesday.

Mr. DANIEL. So far as I am concerned, I am disposed to compromise with the gentleman.

The question was then taken on Mr. SEYMOUR's motion, and there were—ayes 60, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Mr. CHANDLER demanded tellers.

Mr. STANLY demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROOKS. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. If the deficiency bill is not disposed of by Tuesday next, will it not be then superseded by another bill, which has been made the special order?

The SPEAKER. The homestead bill of the gentleman from Tennessee is, by order of the House, the special order after Tuesday next.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire if the last Congress did not appropriate $50,000,000 for the present fiscal year, which is within a few millions of the amount expended annually by Mr. Polk's administration during the war?

Mr. CHANDLER. The amount has been expended to pay Mr. Polk's debts.

Mr. HALL. No, sir; it has been expended to satisfy your extravagance, and I am opposed to indulging your wastefulness any further.

Mr. BROOKS. We challenge inquiry in the Committee of the Whole, that we may refute the assertion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no chance now to debate these things in Committee of the Whole. I shall have an opportunity to make an hour's speech. I was, however, disposed myself, on the assurance of gentlemen around me, that they would give to-morrow, and Monday, and Tuesday, to the deficiency bill—I was disposed to let private bills be taken up to-day, as a day has not been devoted to that business for three weeks.

The question was then taken on ordering the yeas and nays on Mr. SEYMOUR's motion, and there were—ayes 25, noes 70; no quorum.

Mr. FOWLER demanded tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. We cannot do any business until there is a quorum present.

Mr. HALL. It does not require a quorum to order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it requires a majority of the House to do the business of the House.

Mr. HALL. But less than a quorum can order the yeas and nays. Suppose there is a call of the House—

The SPEAKER. That is quite a different thing. It is for the purpose of getting a quorum to do business.

Mr. ORR. It seems to me it is a very hard matter to get a quorum this morning. I move that there be a call of the House, that we may see who is absent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion. That will answer the same purpose as the call.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the question being taken on the motion that there be a call of the House, it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 95; as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Barrere, Bennett, Bibb, Bowie, Bragg, Brenton, Brooks, Buell, Chandler, Churchwell, Conger, Culom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Faulkner, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Goodenow, Gorman, Harper, Hart, Haven, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, James Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Martin, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, Meacham, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Morrison, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Phelps, Porter, Robinson, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Stratton, Taylor, Townsend, Tuck, Venable, Wallace, Welch, Wilcox, and Yates—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, John Appleton, William Appleton, Averett, Babcock, Bartlett, Beale, Bocoock, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Chapman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Daniel, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Edmundson, Ficklin, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Geo. W. Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Mason, McNair, McQueen, Millson, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Olds, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Powell, Price, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Secury, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, Stuart, Sutherland, Benjamin Thompson, Geo. W. Thompson, Thurston, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wildrick, and Williams—95.

So a call of the House was not ordered.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope my colleague will now withdraw his call for the yeas and nays, and permit the House to go into Committee of the Whole, with a view to take up the Private Calendar to-day. Then I am willing that the balance of the week shall be devoted to the consideration of the deficiency bill. We have done scarcely anything, as yet, upon the Private Calendar this session, and I hope the House will consent to take that business into consideration to-day; and under the pressing necessity of the case, I will not insist upon taking up the Private Calendar to-morrow; but I will concur, and I hope those who are disposed to take up the Private Calendar will concur, with the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. HORSTON,] to take up the deficiency bill, and continue its consideration until it is disposed of. I hope the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar will prevail.

Mr. STANLY. If I thought the House would certainly meet to-morrow, and as gentlemen upon the other side of the House desire to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar to-day, I would not object to it. I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the consent of my friend from North Carolina, to allow me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit a proposition, that the resolution providing for closing debate upon the deficiency bill, be so modified as to read, "shall cease in one hour after the committee shall next take the subject under consideration."

I ask permission to state to the House that I now have the floor in committee on that bill, and that I wish to debate the bill itself. I had occupied the floor about eight or ten minutes when the subject was last under consideration, and I have about three minutes left before the hour arrives for closing the debate. Now, if the House will, by unanimous consent, permit the resolution closing debate to be so modified as to provide for closing it in one hour after the committee shall have again resumed the consideration of the subject, I shall then retain the floor, and be able to make some remarks applicable to the bill, as I am instructed to do by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL. I have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas; on the contrary, I think that his request ought to be granted. I think that his explanation ought to be made, concerning items affecting the Indian affairs; and I am perfectly willing to agree in any arrangement which will afford him an opportunity to make the necessary explanation. All I wish is, that this day shall be devoted to the consideration of private business; and then, when the deficiency bill comes up to-morrow, I will concur in any proposition of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Speaker will put the question to the House, whether there is unanimous consent to modify the resolution as I have indicated, that will decide the matter, and nothing more need be said upon the subject.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas to change his request, so as to ask the unanimous consent to take up the motion, which was laid upon the table, to reconsider, and then the matter will be again regularly before the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. That will take up more time. I ask the Speaker whether the proposition will not accomplish my object, if I have the unanimous consent of the House?

The SPEAKER. It will; and it is the only form by which the object can be effected.

Mr. BROOKS. If I can make a bargain with the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] I will not object to his proposition. But under the existing arrangement, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. HUSTON] has an hour to close debate. It is now proposed to give the gentleman from Arkansas another hour; and no one upon this side of the House will have any opportunity to reply to any attacks which may be made.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection that the gentleman be allowed one hour, or ten hours, in the discussion of the bill. But this bill has been before the committee for several days, and gentlemen have spent all the time in discussing irrelevant matters, and have not once touched the bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Not one word have I said.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say to the gentleman that I intend to speak in favor of the estimates of Government in relation to the Indian Department; so that my proposition need not meet with objection upon that side of the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I will not object; but I desire an hour to reply.

Mr. DANIEL. May not the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas be entertained as well to-morrow, when the deficiency bill comes up, as to-day?

The SPEAKER. Just as well.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I hope the matter will be postponed till to-morrow, and come up then.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to object?

Mr. DANIEL. I will not object to it, but I should prefer that the gentleman from Arkansas would withdraw it for the present, and allow it to come up to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I will withdraw it. But I give notice that I shall make the request to-morrow.

Mr. CABELL. All parties seem to agree that it is important this deficiency bill should be taken up and acted upon immediately. The reason given for going into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar is, that two days will be sufficient to dispose of that bill. Now, I would suggest that we go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up the deficiency bill, and see what progress we make upon that bill. Then, if there is a prospect of getting through with it, we can go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar to-morrow. I do not think that two days will be found sufficient to dispose of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind gentlemen that this discussion is wholly out of order.

Mr. CABELL. With the understanding I have stated, I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The question must first be put upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole upon the Private Calendar. This being private bill day, that motion takes precedence.

Mr. HAVEN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Tellers were then demanded, and ordered; and Messrs. PENN and GENTRY were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—yeas 70, nays 61.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair.)

✓ HEIRS OF GENERAL JAMES C. WATSON.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is bill No. 106, for the relief of the legal representatives of General James C. Watson, of the State of Georgia.

[The bill proposes to pay the heirs of Watson the sum of $14,600, with interest, being the amount paid by said Watson for certain slaves purchased of the Creek Indians, which had been captured by them from the Seminole Indians during the Florida war.]

Mr. NEWTON. I desire to ask the House to postpone the consideration of this bill until next Friday, on account of the sickness of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JOHN W. HOWE,] who had the floor upon it when last before the committee for consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I shall be compelled to object to the request made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEWTON.] Some of my constituents are interested in the passage of this bill. I do not desire to deprive the gentleman who last had the floor [Mr. HOWE] of the opportunity of being heard; but it is uncertain when he will have so recovered as to be able to attend in the House.

Mr. NEWTON. He is now convalescent, and will be in the House in a few days. He is now able to be about his House.

Mr. JOHNSON. I apprehend from the character of the claim, and the discussion which will be elicited, that it will not be determined by the committee in a day. Such being the case, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOWE] will have an opportunity to present his objections when we shall again reach the Private Calendar, which will not be until next Friday.

The bill was then read by its title, as indicated above.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not desire, upon this occasion, to make a speech, but simply to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to the consideration of a few facts.

Mr. ALLISON, (interrupting.) I understand that, by the rules, when an objection is made to a bill, and discussion arises thereon, it goes over as a matter of course.

The CHAIRMAN. This is not objection day. Objection days are only the first and fourth Friday of each month.

Mr. JOHNSON, (resuming.) I desire to call the attention of the committee to a few facts, which in my estimation, ought to determine the equity and regularity of this claim. This claim has been before the Government for a number of years. It has been pressed upon the Government from the year 1839, at each session of Congress, up to the present moment, and, so far as I have been informed, it has never been acted upon. It has never been approved or rejected; but it has excited objection and strong opposition. I apprehend that the principal difficulty in this case is not with the merits of the bill itself, but with the facts connected with it, involving, as it does, as was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOWE,] the sale and transfer of negroes. Gentlemen oppose this bill because a vote here, of the indemnity provided for in the bill, and asked for by the petitioners, would be, as they say, to recognize the fact that slavery exists, and to recognize the further fact, that its existence is legal. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] in opposing this bill as also the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOWE] who last occupied the attention of the committee upon this subject, said that the contract in this case was, that the Creek Indians who were engaged in the services of the Government, were entitled to the plunder which they might take from the Seminoles. That is the word, plunder. They say that negroes do not fall under this appellation, and that plunder does not embrace slaves, according to any legitimate reading of the English language; and that such being the contract, and this being a transfer of slaves, or a right to slaves, that, therefore, the applicant in this case is not entitled to relief. The question, Mr. Chairman, is not now how the word plunder is understood in Pennsylvania or New York—not how it is understood in any particular locality in this Republic, but how the parties understand it? What was the intent of the parties to the contract? What did they mean, and how do you arrive at that meaning? What are the rules of construction by which the legal meaning is arrived at, and the terms and operation of the contract determined? The rule of construction, fair, ancient, well established, and uniform, is that the words must be used in the sense, and interpreted in the sense, in which the parties used them; and in connection with this rule, for the purpose of arriving at the intent of the parties, the contemporaneous exposition put upon the words by the parties themselves, is to be resorted to as a standard to guide the judgment of others. How did they regard it? How did the Creek Indians themselves regard it? How did the government officers regard it? They regarded it as embracing negroes and slaves; and for the purpose of establishing that fact, I call the attention of the committee to a few facts. I must state, in this connection, that this case involves a great number of facts, and that it is a case of importance to some of my immediate constituents, and I hope they will pardon me for referring to, and reading a few extracts:

NEWNANSVILLE, (FLA.), September 17, 1837.

SIR: In addition to the inducements held out to the Indians who may enter the service, is that of the Seminole property. Their negroes, horses, and cattle, (and they are rich in that description of property,) will be given to the captors; the Creek warriors, who captured but a small portion of the Seminole property, received for their captures between fourteen and fifteen thousand dollars.

TH. S. JESUP.

Captain WM. ARMSTRONG,
Choctaw Agency, Arkansas.

St. AUGUSTINE, September 24, 1837.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 7th instant. There are thirty-three Seminole prisoners here, two at Tampa, and twenty-four at Fort Pike, in Louisiana; sixteen died, and the remainder, being relatives of the Creek Indians, were allowed to go off with them.

There is one Indian negro here, seventeen at Tampa Bay, about eighty at Fort Pike, and seven have died. The Creek Indians were entitled to all the Indian property they captured. I compromised with them by purchasing the negroes from them on account of the Government.

TH. S. JESUP.

Hon. C. A. HARRIS, Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, May 9, 1838.

SIR: The decision, made a few days since, that the negroes captured by the Creek warriors in Florida should, in compliance with the engagement of General Jesup, be delivered to the delegation now here, has been communicated to them.

C. A. HARRIS, Commissioner.

Captain S. COOPER, Acting Secretary of War.

TAMPA BAY, September 7, 1837.

SIR: All Indian property taken will belong to the captors. The Seminoles have large herds of cattle and horses, and several negroes. I am well acquainted with all their positions, and will find them in five or six days after I commence the campaign.

TH. S. JESUP.

Captain DAVID S. WALKER, Talladega, Alabama.

FORT GILMILAND, September 17, 1837.

CAPTAIN: In addition to their pay as soldiers, they [the Choctaw warriors] will have all the Seminole property they capture; and those Indians are rich in cattle, horses, and negroes. The Creek warriors received between fourteen and fifteen thousand dollars for their captures.

TH. S. JESUP.

Captain B. L. BONNEVILLE, 7th Infantry,
Commanding Choctaw Warriors,
Choctaw Agency, Arkansas.

The negroes captured by the Creek warriors in Florida were to be delivered to them. Such was the interpretation put upon this contract by the officers of the Government, and proves that the word plunder was understood by them as embracing slaves, cattle, horses, and all kinds of property, known and recognized by the people as property. What was the meaning of, and what were they to have under the agreement? They were to have all the slaves they captured. They were to be delivered up to them specifically. The Government failed to do it. But says the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SACKETT,] the Government could not make such contracts. Why not? What precludes the Government from making a contract while in a state of hostility? Is there any constitutional prohibition? Why cannot they make a contract of this sort, as well as a contract to buy horses, mules, corn, and fodder? The argument of the gentleman is, that the Government cannot make any contract for the sale and delivery of slaves, because they are not the subjects of property, and ought not to be recognized by them as such, and therefore they cannot make a contract in reference to them. They say the contract could not be made by the Government, the subject-matter being slaves, because slavery did not exist among the Seminoles. How is that fact to be ascertained? It is a simple fact, and how shall it be proved and established? It is to be established by testimony alone. In Russia there are serfs appendant to the soil. Every one recognizes that fact. How is it established? By the testimony of credible witnesses, by historians, by travelers, and by persons cognizant of their customs, and manners, and laws. Does the gentleman know that Russia has serfs? He is bound to believe it, because there is credible testimony to establish that fact. The same kind of testimony which establishes that there are serfs in Russia attached to the soil, is here before this House, and in these documents, to establish the fact that slavery exists among the Seminoles. Here are witnesses—the members of this House. Here is the history given by the officers of this Government, who state the fact that they were rich in slaves—rich in this species of property. And yet this gentleman says there is no evidence before this House going to establish the fact of the existence of slavery among the Seminoles.

Here, sir, is their history; a history given by the officers of this Government, that they were rich in slaves—rich in that species of property; and yet the gentleman says there is no evidence. There is as much evidence, Mr. Chairman—perhaps not so much, but it is of as strong a character—which would equally induce belief in the mind of every individual that slavery existed among the Seminole Indians at that time, as it exists now in the State of Georgia. Just as much. Now, sir, this being a fact, and being so recognized by the Government, as I shall proceed to show you by reference to a few official documents, the Government had the power to make contracts in reference to existing facts:

TAMPA BAY, April 18, 1837.

MY DEAR SIR: If the citizens of the Territory be prudent, the war may be considered at an end; but any attempt to interfere with Indian negroes, or to arrest any of the chiefs or warriors, either as criminals or debtors, would cause an immediate resort to hostilities. The negroes control their masters.

Most truly yours,

HIS EXCELLENCY R. K. CALL,
Governor of Florida, Tallahassee.

TH. S. JESUP.

Here then, sir, is the relation of master established, and that in a communication made by Thomas S. Jesup, in 1837. "The negroes control their Indian masters." There the right is established by the recital of that fact. Here is a right to control, but the fact of control may be disputed. That is in issue:

ST. AUGUSTINE, July 7, 1837.

COLONEL: There is now no obligation to spare the property of the Indians—they have not spared that of the citizens; their negroes, cattle, and horses, as well as other property which they possess, will belong to the corps by which they may be captured. The property of citizens which may be captured will be restored to them.

I am, &c.,

Colonel JOHN WARREN, Florida Militia,

St. Augustine, Florida.

TH. S. JESUP.

This is in July, 1837. "All the Indians' property will belong to the captors. The Seminoles have large herds of cattle and horses, and several negroes." All that property, and among their property they have "cattle, horses, and negroes." But I have another authority here, sir; but I cannot turn to it, because I omitted to turn down the page. It is a communication from General Taylor to one of the heads of the Departments of the Government. He states, sir, that there was slavery among the Seminoles; and I think General Taylor may be regarded as a much higher authority than the gentleman from New York or from Pennsylvania. General Taylor recognized the fact, and the Government has recognized the fact, that it was competent in a state of war, and the United States being a party to that war, to contract with proper agents to plunder and forage on the property of the enemy, and take whatever property that enemy might have had in its possession. But it is said, Mr. Chairman, that there is another fact not established in this case; the fact of capture by the Creek Indians themselves of any property belonging to the Seminole Indians. It has been alleged that this has not been established by competent and sufficient proof. I read further:

TAMPA BAY, September 9, 1837.

SIR: You will muster the Creek regiment out of service, and honorably discharge them; then you will proceed to New Orleans and obtain funds to pay the Creeks for the captured negroes.

TH. S. JESUP.

Lieutenant F. SEARLE,
Acting Assistant Inspecting General,
Army of the South, Tampa Bay.

Here, sir, then, the fact is established by this communication, made by General Jesup, that the First Regiment aided and assisted, and were present at the capture of the negroes, and $8,000 was paid for them. Now, Mr. Chairman, this claim has been repeatedly acknowledged by the different Departments of this Government, but it is said that there is no evidence here going to establish a further fact that General Watson ever paid to these Indians the amount stipulated for the negroes—that he ever paid the $14,600. But, sir, there is most ample proof, of the most credible and competent character before this committee, to establish that fact. I have the proof here, which is in this paper. It is the deposition of William Armstrong; and I will ask the gentleman to read it, as it is very long, and it would take up too much of the time of this committee to read the whole of it to them. I will refer to a portion of it. He states the fact that General Watson paid the money to him as the agent of the Creeks, and he paid it out to the Creeks themselves in the country to which they had removed. Here, then, is a deposition to establish the fact, without the least ambiguity of language or equivocation of expression. Here, sir, is a recommendation of the Secretary of War: "John Bell, the Secretary of War, ordering that these negroes be delivered up to Watson;" thus recognizing that the contract was of a binding character. They were not delivered up. Further: Here is a recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee, and here is the opinion of General Arbuckle, that this valid claim ought to be paid. Watson is entitled to the money on the contract—a "bona fide" contract—that he paid his money upon that contract, and that he ought to receive the damages which he had sustained from the failure of a performance of that contract. Now, what was that contract? Why, it was, that Watson should have those negroes delivered to him, who were taken and captured by the Creek Indians, for the Government of the United States then had these negroes in their possession—they were under their entire control—they were all at their disposal—they were held by the Government. Now, sir, the Government, holding this property, and being anxious to dispose of its obligations with the Creek Indians, desired to procure some person to purchase the Indians' rights to these negroes, so that they should not be a bone of contention among the Creek Indians and the other Indians when they went west; and Watson agreed to give them $14,600 for these negroes, and an order was issued for their delivery. But they were not delivered. So by this contract with Watson, the Government was discharged from its obligations to the Creeks. They had received Watson's money. Thus the Government was discharged from any further obligation to the Creeks, but they were under obligation to Watson to deliver these negroes. But the Government failed to deliver the negroes. It was part of its obligation to deliver them to the Creeks, or to the assignees of the Creeks; but they delivered them to neither.

Mr. WELCH. The gentlemen will allow me, as I understand the facts of the case. There was no contract made on the part of Government. The contract was made between the Indians, by their agent, and General Watson.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, with the Indians themselves.

Mr. WELCH. It was made with the Indians themselves—but that is immaterial. There was no contract on the part of the Government. It was only a contract to give an order that the negroes should be delivered up.

Mr. JOHNSON. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that there was a contract on the part of the Government. The Government having contracted with these Creek Indians, they having possession of these negroes, it was part of their contract to deliver them to the Creeks; and I say, sir, that if these negroes were proper subjects for plunder, and the Government had the control of this plunder, was it not the duty of the Government to deliver the plunder taken? Could they discharge themselves from their contract in any way? The Creeks came forward to sell their claim by the consent of Commissioner Harris, with his full knowledge and approval, as is shown by these papers, and to transfer their rights to Watson, and the Government being in possession of the negroes, were they not under obligation to deliver them to Watson? Why, just as much as a man is obliged to pay a note which he has indorsed when it is due. It was a contract entered into by the Government to deliver up these negroes, and they failed to deliver them up. Here, sir, is a breach of contract on the part of the Government, and we are entitled to damages, and could recover damages before any court of justice—before any judge or jury. It seems to me, sir, that these circumstances establish a breach of contract on the part of the Government. Why, they say, "do not pay Watson anything." Why? Because he ought to have given sixty or seventy thousand dollars for these negroes, and as long as he will not do that the Government will not pay him back. Who made the first contract with the Indians? Why, General Jesup, and he consented to give them $8,000, but Watson was to give them $14,000. Who was giving them the most? Why, Watson. But if we were before a judge and jury, in a civil suit, the amount of damages which we should be entitled to recover, would not be the amount of money paid as a consideration, but the value of the property; and, sir, the Government is, according to the rules laid down, liable to us for the value of the property at the time it should have been delivered. We say now, pay us back what we have paid; but no commiseration is felt for us. You have got our money without consideration, and it has been paid to the Creeks; you have not delivered the property; you have not complied with your contract, and both in law and in equity, it would be required that you should pay back that consideration with interest. Pay us back our money which we have paid at your instance, and do not examine into the validity of the contract—do not go into the matter of the contract, for it is not our fault. Pay us back what we have paid. They say it was illegal, because the subject-matter was slaves. Well, suppose it were illegal; suppose that selling these slaves was illegal; suppose no slaves existed there, and suppose all these facts, the Government has got our money without discharging its obligations to us; without performing its part of the contract which it ought to have done, and what every honest man would do. The Government should not put up the illegality of the contract, and keep us out of our money. They should not say that this is not a proper contract, but we have got your money and we will not pay it back now and will keep it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen get up here and talk about kings and queens. They talked about Abraham and Bowlegs reigning in Florida, who were going by Watson to be sold—that he was going to reduce them to eternal bondage. They were already in bondage, and are now. They have gone to the West as the slaves of the Indians; but with some gentlemen it is no matter about their being in slavery so long as they do not belong to Southern men. While owned by Indians, it is all right. There would be no refusal to pay back the Indians under such circumstances, because they held negroes in bondage; but when a claimant from the State of Georgia contracts with them, it is declared that the consideration is not legal; that it was not a matter of contract; slavery did not exist there; we will keep your money. They go on still further, and talk about eternal bondage—about plunder and about prisoners of war. In the course of war, we can make prisoners. We can take white people in a state of hostility prisoners of war. We can make Mexicans prisoners of war, and take their property while in hostility to this Government. We did it, and by the rules of war. But here are these Indians, hiding in ambush and carrying on a barbarous warfare, not according to the rules of civilized society, which we cannot plunder. We cannot take their negroes—that would be cruel—but they have a right to carry off those held by our citizens. Gentlemen come forward and say, that the Seminoles, while moving West, saw these negroes, and had compassion upon them in the midst of their chains, and carried them to the West along with themselves. Jesup's and the Indians' hearts were in the right place, but Watson's was not—he wanted to make a speculation. A man in making a trade wants to make something out of it. In Pennsylvania, I have no doubt, when men make a trade, they desire to make as much as they can from it. But the question is not as to whether he wanted to make money or not. He certainly thought it was a prudent contract, or else he would not have entered into it. He, as would gentlemen in Pennsylvania and New York, desired to gain by it. A man anywhere would be actuated by the same feelings. For that reason, however, is the Government to deny him repayment? It is said that he made a good bargain. Well, if he did, he has not got the benefits of it. It has turned up to be a very bad one. I hear expressions of this kind: that it was a profitable speculation; that he entered upon it for that purpose; that he had his eyes set upon the negroes—upon the gain to accrue from the transaction, from which it is concluded that the Government should not pay him back the money he has paid. It is the law, I believe, of every State in this Union, that where you get money without consideration, the money is to be refunded. That is equity and law, and the money is bound to be paid back. These Indians had been raging a war against us, destroying our people and their property. They had been plundering us of our negroes, and we, in return, having the right to plunder them—

Mr. SACKETT. I interrupt the gentleman for the purpose of making a statement of a few facts connected with this case. The contract with the Creek Indians by General Jesup was made in September; I have not the contract here, but it was during the month of September, 1836. By reports made to the War Department from Florida, it is shown that none of the Creek warriors got into the service of the United States earlier than the latter part of December of that year. On the 6th day of March, 1837, a treaty was made with the Seminole Indians, by which hostilities ceased, which left only two months for the Creeks to be in service. Now, I state, as a matter of fact, that a large portion of these very negroes you are talking about either were captured or came in voluntarily after that treaty was entered into with the Seminoles. I wish to direct the gentleman's attention to another consideration—to a letter written by General Arbuckle, as late as August, 1837, which was about four months after this claim of contract was made by Watson, in which he states the fact that he had received a letter from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and one also from the Secretary of War, from which he learned that it was unknown in Washington that the money had been paid for these negroes. That is four months after the transaction.

Mr. JOHNSON. But few of the negroes were captured in the two months of service rendered by the Creek warriors in Florida, and most of the negroes which were sent West came in voluntarily after the making of the treaty of peace; but here is the schedule of those that were captured, and it is shown here that General Jesup paid to these Creek warriors $8,000 for negroes. But the amount of negroes signifies nothing. They took some; but suppose they only captured one, and Watson agreed to give $14,000 for that one these Indians had aided our people in taking, still the Government would be bound to comply with its engagement—to either deliver the captured to the captors, or to refund the money that has been paid. The contract not being complied with, the consideration having failed, this Government, I contend, is bound to give back the money it has received. Does the gentleman deny this to be sound law—that were money has been paid upon a consideration, and the consideration fails to be rendered, it should be given back?

Mr. WELCH. The difficulty here is, that the gentleman from Georgia assumes that the Government has received this money. The truth is, that the Government has not received one cent of it. Suppose, as the gentleman has said, that there was but one negro captured and in custody at the time this order was given; the utmost extent of the liability of the Government, upon the gentleman's own hypothesis, would be the value of that negro. But what I wish to call the gentleman's attention to is the fact that, in the papers before us, there is a total absence of proof and identification of any one negro as having been a slave to the Seminoles, or as having been captured by the Creek warriors previous to the capitulation of March, 1837.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the gentleman will excuse me; I have not time. General Watson attempted in various ways to procure the possession of these negroes. He sent Collins to Little Rock, Arkansas, after the Government had transported them West, for the purpose of getting them. Collins went as the agent of Watson, and also as the agent of the Creek warriors, who had made the sale to Watson under the power of attorney; an agent appointed, not by the Government for the Creeks, but an agent appointed by the parties themselves. Being unable to obtain the possession of the negroes at the West, he next endeavored to get back the money that he had paid from the Indian agent. He wanted either his money or the negroes. It was natural that he should try every opportunity to remunerate himself.

The gentleman from Ohio, however, denies the Government having made this contract with Watson, and says that it was not made at its instance, nor by its consent. Now, with all respect to the gentleman, I think that there is here evidence showing that it was done at the instance of the Government. The Government wanted some one to purchase the negroes, and Watson was here. But, supposing it was not made at the instance of the Government, then the Government this day owes the Creek Indians for the value of these negroes. The Government has been discharged from the contract, or it has not been discharged from the contract; and if it has been discharged, it was by the payment of money made by Watson. If that is not the case, the Government to-day owes the Creek Indians for their captures in Florida from the Seminoles. You are either under an obligation to Watson, or you are under an obligation to the Creeks. The contract which Watson made with the Creeks, exonerated the Government from liability; and, of course, the Government gave an order to the agent of Watson—Collins—directed to its agent at Fort Pike who had possession of the negroes, that they should be delivered up to Watson. There is an acknowledgment. That shows that it was done by the consent of the Government, or else the Government would not have given such an order.

But the gentleman says that there was no identification of the negroes taken from the Seminoles. Watson's right does not depend upon the identification. The Government had the possession of the negroes, and whose duty was it to identify them? Whose else but the Government's, who had directed that they should be delivered up. It was the Government that should have done it, and not Watson; yet the Government made no attempts to identify them. If it did not identify, the fault was not with Watson. It actually gave the order for the delivering of these negroes; and because Watson did identify the negroes, having paid over his money upon an agreement of this sort, and the Government failing to comply with its promise, is he to lose the negroes and his money, and the Government to be discharged from its obligations under the contract?

I have already detained the committee longer than I ought to have done, but the numerous facts in the case made it necessary to say thus much. It has been rumored, that individuals intended to attack the character of General Watson, as a man of integrity and standing. General Watson was a citizen of my own State, and died in the town where I reside. I knew him well. He was a speculating man, it is true, like many other men; but that is not his crime, and will not release the Government from his obligations. His estate is now insolvent. If it had been managed prudently, it would not have been so. A more humane man did not live upon the banks of the Chattahoochee, or the Alleghany. He was charged with frauds. But admit that he was a fraudulent man; put it upon the ground that he had committed divers frauds; does that authorize the Government to defraud him? Because he has done wrong, shall we do wrong? If he was fraudulent, will that exonerate the Government from complying with its contracts? What do they owe him? They owe him a return of the money that he paid. But he was not a fraudulent man. He stood high in the estimation of his neighbors, and to the day of his death possessed their esteem and good will. If the payment of this claim is to be put upon an issue of that sort, Watson's friends would not fear to meet such an issue.

There is another grave objection comes in here against the payment of this claim, one founded upon national politics, which has been disturbing the country from one end to the other. There are men in certain sections who say that we cannot do any act which will recognize the existence of slavery. They cannot countenance, by their votes, the recognition of the fact, that slavery does exist. Can gentlemen, by their votes, destroy the existence of Government as it is? It makes no difference how they vote, or what may be their feelings, slavery did exist, and will still exist. They may defeat Watson's claim, and keep his money in their pockets. They cannot destroy the existence of slavery, and they must have a connection with it. They have connected themselves with the institutions of the country by the compact, whether they recognize it or not. They have agreed solemnly that slavery, in certain portions of this country, should be represented upon this floor. It is represented here. This fact they have to recognize, whether it is palatable or not.

Mr. WELCH. General Jesup, in several of his letters, says that he treated with the Seminole Indians as an independent and separate nation. I wish to propound this question to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JOHNSON,] admitting that we must, under the Constitution, which I do not admit, recognize the existence of slavery in the States, can we recognize its existence in a separate and independent nation? For instance, if we should have a war with Turkey, and in that war should capture some of the slaves held by the Turks, I ask the gentleman if we can, under the Constitution of the United States, treat those captured slaves as property? I say we cannot.

Mr. JOHNSON. In ancient times, according to the rules of war, you treated persons as property who were taken in war. What is to prevent us from doing it?

Mr. SACKETT. Because the nation cannot hold that property.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is to prevent the nation from holding it? But my time will not allow me to be drawn into a discussion of such questions, although I would like to do it. Admitting your principles to be true, ought not Watson to have his money? That is the question before the committee. But I say that they are connected with slavery, and they recognize the fact. You have treaties with Brazil, and in making treaties with Brazil you recognize that Government as an existing fact. According to the facts of the case, you recognize a government according to its internal regulations. You must recognize the facts as they are; and a refusal upon your part will not destroy the facts. But they are otherwise connected with it. They have solemnly agreed that when slaves escape from service into one of the States, and we come to claim them, that they will deliver those slaves. That is their agreement. It is a solemn compact between independent communities by sovereign States, and by this compact they connect themselves with the institution, and cannot disconnect themselves from it and maintain their agreement. In disconnecting themselves from this compact, they show themselves a covenant-breaking people. They have covenanted and solemnly stipulated to do it, and they have failed to do it. Suppose that such was not the case. What has that to do with this case? Nothing but to stir up prejudice, and nothing but to justify and authorize a man to vote against this claim, and to go before his constituents, who do not understand these questions, and to declare to them that he voted against slavery in every possible shape. There would be nothing to justify him in refusing to do justice and pay back our money, but that slavery existed, and that contract referred to slaves. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] appeals to national law. He says national law does not recognize the existence of slavery. I think the gentleman is in great error upon that point. National law recognizes nations as they exist, and it cannot recognize them otherwise than as they do exist. National law has nothing to do with the municipal or internal regulations of States, but only to regulate the intercourse of foreign States with each other. In doing that, it recognizes the existence of States, as they are in point of fact. National law then recognizes slavery wherever slavery exists. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] says that the presumption from the rules of national law is in favor of freedom. Now that may be the rule of evidence in New York, but it is not in Georgia. The national law has no right to change it either in New York or Georgia. It may be a rule of evidence to make a presumption in favor of freedom where such a rule is founded upon municipal law, and where that municipal law is established by the State itself, and it may be a presumption of law against freedom on account of color, but national law has nothing to do with these rules of evidence forming the law of a locality. Then, I say, what bearing have they upon the issue? It is a simple question, and with this simple statement I will now take my seat. The Government agreed to do a thing and did not do it. We paid our money to the Government upon their agreeing to do it. They have got our money, and refuses to pay back the money. All these questions about national law, the presumption of evidence, eternal chains and bondage, may manifest a man's disposition and feeling; in other words, they may prove that a man has "strong free-soil tendencies," but they do not show the fact, that we are not entitled to our money.

Mr. SACKETT. I do not propose to detain the committee long, as I have in some degree presented my views upon this case before. I only propose to recall the attention of the committee to certain points, that I think should govern this case. I wish to say here in the very outset, that all this attempt to bring this case within any influence, either of slavery or anti-slavery, I think, is entirely foreign to the consideration of the subject, and if my remarks the other day had any such tendency, I can only say, that nothing could have been further from my intentions.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am happy that the gentleman has arrived at the conclusion, that these things have nothing to do with the merits of the case, and I hope I will stand excused before the committee, for having alluded to them, because something was said about national laws, and eternal bondage. I spoke strictly in reply to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SACKETT. I will not call the gentleman's propriety into question. What I intended to say the other day—a matter connecting itself in some degree with questions of slavery—was simply to lay down certain propositions of law—propositions that I regarded as sound and as applicable to this case. If this law question connects itself in any degree with the slavery questions of the day, it is a thing I cannot avoid—a thing which belongs to the consideration of the case and cannot be separated from it. First, let us look at the beginning of this case; and I desire to call the attention of the gentlemen who have been addressing the committee upon this subject, to this part of the case, as well as to its other and more important parts. I think, before I sit down, that I will be able to convince even them, that this Government is under no obligation whatever to pay any portion of this money.

The case began in a contract made by a commanding officer in the time of war, with a certain other independent foreign power (the Creek Indians) for the supply of troops, to be engaged in that war. That is the origin of the claim. As a part of the terms of that agreement, the troops thus engaged were to have a certain compensation per month, and a certain contingent compensation by way of plunder; the agreement securing to them all the plunder they might take from the common enemy. There can be no disagreement about all of these propositions. In this agreement rests the origin of the claim. As I said the other day, and must necessarily say now, the proper, fair, and legal construction of the term "plunder" is a necessary element in arriving at a just conclusion in relation to the claim. I suppose "plunder," in its common signification, would mean any kind of property taken by our allies in the service for which they were engaged that is recognized as property by the party contracting thus to pay.

We have now arrived at a legal position in the case. The word "plunder" covers any kind of property recognized as property by this Government, and secures, under the agreement, to the Creeks all such plunder, and no other.

Now, I ask any gentleman, no matter whether he be from the North or from the South, whether he be pro-slavery or free-soil, whether he be the owner of slaves or an abolitionist—does the Government of the United States, as a Confederacy—and the Government is the contracting power here if there is any party contracting—does the Government of the United States, as a Confederacy, recognize slaves as the property of the Confederacy, or as property that the Confederacy can hold, in any form whatever? Every one will answer, manifestly, not. It has been decided too frequently, to admit of doubt; it is too plain a proposition to admit even of argument. No man can gainsay the soundness of the position, that the United States, as a contracting party, agreeing to secure plunder to an ally they were engaging in their service, do not thereby agree to recognize as plunder what by the Constitution and laws of the country is not recognized as property? Is not that a sound proposition? I think it is.

Thus much upon the construction of the contract. I hope the committee will understand me as not regarding this part of the case as a very important part of it, for I think it is not. I think there are other considerations which would relieve the Government from any liability, even if the word "slaves" had been used in the contract itself, or if the Government could hold or convey slaves by contract.

The next proposition that should be presented in order to give the committee a clear and continuous understanding of the subject, is the question touching, what gentlemen have frequently called in the course of this discussion, the "agreement" of General Jesup to liquidate the claim that the Creek Indians had upon these negroes for $8,000.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. He did not agree to do it.

Mr. SACKETT. I understand that.

Mr. CLINGMAN, (interrupting.) I desire to ascertain a fact in this connection, by which my vote will be in a great measure regulated. I want to know, whether the Government of the United States received the money from this individual, and whether or not any consideration has ever been given for that money?

Now, I do not care anything about the contract. I hold that, if the Government received the money from this individual, and failed to make him any consideration for it, they are bound to return it.

Mr. SACKETT. Certainly; certainly. I agree with the gentleman entirely in that. But, if the gentleman will allow me, I wish to discuss this matter in order. I will answer the question of the gentleman as it arises in its order. I will only now say that this Government never received one cent of this money. It was received by the Creeks.

The next stage, as I was about saying, in this proceeding was, what has been termed by some of those who have discussed this question, the contract, or agreement, or proposition, or whatever else you may call it, made by General Jesup some time after these negroes were taken, to give the Creek authorities $8,000 for their claim, whatever it was, upon these negroes. A sufficient presentation of that branch of the case, is this: General Jesup, for considerations deemed by him to be wise—undoubtedly for the purpose of settling all differences between the Creek nation and the United States—made a proposition to that nation to liquidate the claim they made to these negroes, whether sound or unsound, good or bad, by allowing them $8,000.

Mr. WELCH, (in his seat.) With a view to the negroes remaining free.

Mr. SACKETT. Yes; that is, perhaps, a presentation of the subject that ought to be made, although, in my view of the case, I have endeavored to steer entirely clear of all this slavery issue. The gentleman from Ohio suggests that it was with a view to the negroes remaining free. But, be that so or not, the proposition was made, and it was never accepted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I must beg leave to differ from the gentleman from New York, in the statement which he makes with reference to the object with which the proposition was made. The correspondence with the Department shows that the leading object was to prevent the negroes from going to the western country, where they would be a bone of contention.

Mr. SACKETT. It will be borne in mind these negroes did go West; and all this pretense about difficulty time has shown unfounded. I do not mean to say that the proposition of General Jesup was made with a view to freeing the negroes from slavery, because I do not think they were then in a state of slavery. But the result of the extinguishment of the claim of the Creek nation would have been to free the negroes, whatever the object or intention might have been. It is sufficient to say in regard to this branch of the case, that the proposition was made by General Jesup, but never acceded to, and the compact was therefore never consummated. General Jesup at one time, in one of his letters to the Department, seemed to regard it as a contract that he expected would be carried out. But whatever his expectations were, and whatever was the object and intention of the parties, the agreement never was consummated, and, therefore, so far as any legal bearing upon subsequent proceedings is concerned, it is as if it had never been made. That is the second stage of these proceedings.

We next come to a period when a deputation from the Creek Indians was here in Washington. This was in the spring of 1838, and at that same time it so happened that all these speculators—General Watson and all concerned coming direct from the scene of all these transactions, and understanding them all very well, far better than any one here—knowing the character of the connection of the United States with these negroes—the character of the connection of the Creek Indians with them, and knowing also the character of the connection of the Seminoles with these negroes—and knowing perfectly well that a treaty had been made about two months before, by which this Government solemnly recognized the rights of the Seminoles to these same negroes, the terms of which I will hereafter state—knowing all these things, it so happened that all these parties, Indian agents, speculators, and all, happened to be in Washington at that time. I do not know that there was anything wrong about all this, but it did so happen. It was a meeting of speculators to make a speculation.

Well, General Watson, it appears, entered into a negotiation for these negroes, and I shall treat it now, for the sake of the argument, as an independent, fair transaction; he, understanding that he had a right to enter into a negotiation with the Creeks, who were here, for the purchase of their claim to these negroes. On the 9th of May, 1838, he consummated a contract in which the chiefs of that tribe guaranteed to him a title to this property. Knowing all the antecedents in relation to this property, and understanding what he did, he purchased their title, and took their guarantee of title as his sole security. He asked nothing of this Government.

Thus far I see no sort of connection of this Government with this transaction. Now, I ask the gentleman from Georgia, who has discussed this matter with so much ability, to point me to a letter or line where the Government recognizes itself as a participant, in any form, in that contract.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I will show it by a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of War, dated July 1, 1840, and the Secretary's indorsement thereof, and which are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, }
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, July 1, 1840.

SIR: Since my report to you, of 8th April last, was transmitted to the Hon. Mr. Dawson, a member of the Committee of the House of Representatives of Claims, authentic information has been received of the price paid by General James C. Watson for the negroes taken by the Creek Indians in Florida, to the capture and purchase of whom that report related.

These prisoners were the property of their captors, by the agreement between the Creek warriors and General Jesup. The difficulty about the possession of them, the action of the Government therein, and the purchase of them by the present claimant have been heretofore examined, and are fully understood. These negroes cannot, under the circumstances, be obtained by General Watson, and I have heretofore recommended that the money be paid the Creeks for them, and interest on it, should be refunded to him—but the amount of the consideration was then unknown here.

It now appears from the testimony of Captain William Armstrong, taken on the 29th ultimo, that the contract between the Creek chiefs and General Watson for these slaves (which, it seems, is now mislaid or lost) was witnessed by him in the spring of 1838, that it was fair, and, considering the risk of collision between the Creeks and Seminoles in the West, on the subject of the negroes, should they be carried there, he thinks the sale of them, before they reached Arkansas, was politic—that the consideration of the said sale was $14,600, which was, by the direction of the Creek chiefs, who were empowered to act in the premises for the Creek warriors that had been in Florida, paid to the deponent in trust for those entitled to it, and that it was actually paid over to them by him in the Indian country, on the 4th of July, 1838.

The dates of the contract and of the payments to Captain Armstrong are not given, but the 1st of May may be regarded as the time, without the risk of injustice either way.

These negroes cannot be obtained by General Watson. Any attempt at enforcing a claim to them under the Creek warriors would, perhaps, have resulted in a conflict, and as the hazard of such an issue prevented the use of more than persuasive means, I think General Watson has a just claim on the United States for the money he paid, and in interest.

The amount paid, as already stated, was $14,600
Interest from 1st May, 1838, to 1st July, 1840, 1,898

$16,498

For this sum of $16,498, I think an appropriation ought to be made, and respectfully recommend, if it meets your approbation, that a communication be made to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, asking for it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. HARTLEY CRAWFORD.

Hon. J. R. POINSETT, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 3, 1840.

SIR: In compliance with the suggestion contained in the inclosed report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I have the honor, respectfully, to recommend that the appropriation of $16,498, suggested by that officer for the payment of the claim of General Watson for negroes captured by the Creeks in Florida, may be asked of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. R. POINSETT.

Hon. J. W. JONES, Chairman Committee Ways and Means.

[EXTRACT.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 11, 1840.

SIR: Mr. Watson's claim arises under a contract made by General Jesup, with the Creek warriors, which was sanctioned by the Department. The appropriation asked for is required to enable the Department to comply with the contract, and to carry it into effect, and upon its being made by Congress this claim will also be paid.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. R. POINSETT.

Hon. J. W. JONES, Chairman Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have another paper that I should like to read. It is this:

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 23, 1841.

SIR: You are aware that there are certain negroes in Arkansas, who became the property of their Creek captors by an arrangement between General Th. S. Jesup and the Creek warriors who went to Florida in 1836 against the Seminoles. These negroes were purchased by General James C. Watson, of Georgia, from the Creek chiefs in Washington city in the spring of 1838; and the price of them in the contract, which you witnessed, and think fair, was placed in your hands as Acting Superintendent of the Western Territory, and paid over by you to the Creeks on the 4th of July, 1838.

You will please take the proper measures to have these negroes delivered to General James C. Watson, above named, or his lawfully authorized agent, or so many of them as are now living.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. BELL, Secretary of War.

Major WILLIAM ARMSTRONG, Acting Superintendent Western Territory, now at Washington City, D. C.

Mr. SACKETT. This letter from the Secretary of War, which has just been read, was dated in 1841 and the other letters in 1840. Now, this contract took place in 1838, when Mr. Bell, the Secretary of War, in 1841, was not in office, and, consequently, he had no participation in the matter whatever. His letter is a mere recital of what had taken place before the matter had then been before Congress, and had become a matter of public history. This Secretary of War, as I said, was not in office when this contract was made, and had nothing whatever to do with it. These papers just read, however, expressly state the fact, that the Government up to June, 1840, knew nothing about this contract or the price paid. If I had any partisan feeling in the matter, I should thank the gentleman from Georgia for producing this proof. It is corroborative of what I am saying. I should thank the gentleman for producing it, because he furnishes a paper, he being an advocate for the claim, reciting the fact, that at the time the contract was made, the Government did really know nothing about the transaction.

But I now assert the fact, and I challenge the production of documents to contradict it, that there is not a letter or a line of proof in the case to show that the Government of the United States participated in any form in the inception, consummation, or execution of this contract of General Watson with the Creek Indians; but, on the contrary, there is abundant proof that they knew nothing about it.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman allow me to say a single word? I desire to ask him if he has examined the letter of Judge Iverson?

Mr. SACKETT. I have not.

Mr. DANIEL. If the gentleman will examine, he will find that it contains full proof of the knowledge of the Government on the subject.

Mr. SACKETT. I have not examined it, and I do not regard it as evidence in the case. It is a letter from an individual, written this winter here in Washington, in regard to what he accidentally heard said. It is of what he heard said in this city fourteen years ago in relation to a matter in which he had no interest. I would not hold him responsible at all for what he heard said under such circumstances fourteen years ago. I have heard the letter read, and remember enough about it to know that it is of no sort of consequence. It is enough to know that he was not an officer of the Government, and only states his recollection of the loose, and, as I think, entirely irresponsible conversation which he heard fourteen years since, in a matter in which he took not the slightest interest one way or the other. Why, sir, the parties interested have long since called for all the correspondence and evidence from the Departments, and for many years have been in possession of all the evidence that can be regarded as reliable or safe. These after births in evidence are only the spasms of a desperate cause.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I have here a letter from the Secretary of War, dated July 21, 1838, a few days after the making of the contract, in which the expenses for making that contract are recognized:

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 21, 1838.

SIR: The Adjutant General has laid before me your letter of the 13th ultimo, together with copies of the correspondence between you and Lieutenant Reynolds, respecting the negroes captured by the Creek warriors, in Florida, from the Seminoles. Enclosed I transmit a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, accompanied by copies of various papers, from which you will learn the facts of the case, and the reasons which have governed the Department in the course which has been taken. You will be pleased to carry out the decision of the Department, that these negroes shall be delivered to the Creek warriors, provided this can be done without violence or the use of force. Should you not be able to effect the object peaceably and quietly, it will be better that the negroes remain with the Seminoles. In this event, however, you should take measures to convince the Creeks that compensation will be made to them for the loss of the negroes; and lest they may be exasperated at their failure to get what they claim, and thus bring on the very state of things which the Department has been trying to avoid, you can assure them that the influence of the Department will be used to its fullest extent to procure from Congress the means of indemnifying them. It is much to be regretted that Lieutenant Reynolds did not comply with his directions, and deliver the negroes to Mr. Collins before they reached the Indian country. Much difficulty and dissatisfaction would thereby have been avoided, and the original object of the Department—that of preventing collisions between the two tribes—would probably have been effected. But, as they are there, the best that can be done is believed to be the delivery of the negroes to the agent of the Creeks, to be brought out of the Indian country; but this delivery not to be made if force has to be used. The whole affair is a delicate and difficult one, and your judgment and discretion are relied on to bring it to a close in a matter satisfactory to all concerned. Yours, &c.,

J. R. POINSETT.

Brevet Brigadier-General M. ARBUCKLE,
Fort Gibson, Arkansas.

Mr. SACKETT. It will be seen that this letter, like the rest, does not sustain the gentleman, although it was written several months after the contract was made. This letter, too, repudiates the contract, and treats the whole transaction as with the Creeks. After this labored effort of the advocates of this claim to produce evidence to show that the Government participated in the making or the execution of this contract, I think I may safely say that none can be produced. But I will not stop here; I will not leave the case to negative proofs I will show that there is affirmative evidence entirely satisfactory, to prove that the Government so far from participating in the making of this contract did not as much as know of its existence for some months afterwards. Every single letter written by Mr. Harris, who was then Superintendent of Indian Affairs, to the officers of the Army in command, that alludes to these negroes, speaks of them in connection with the rights of the Creeks. But in not one of them is there one line or one word tending to recognize the participation of this Government in this contract, or even the existence of any such agreement, or that Watson had any interest whatever.

Here is one of his letters, and there are more than twenty of the same character:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, May 9, 1838.

SIR: The decision made a few days since, that the negroes captured by the Creek warriors in Florida should, in compliance with the engagement of General Jesup, be delivered to the delegation now here, has been communicated to them, with the intimation that when they had determined what disposition would be made of them, and communicated information of the same to this Department, the necessary orders would be issued. In a communication just received from the delegation, they state they have appointed Nathaniel F. Collins, of Alabama, their attorney in fact, to receive the negroes. I have the honor to request that an order may be issued to the commanding officer at Fort Pike, to Major Isaac Clark, at New Orleans, to the commanding officer in Florida, and to any other officers who may have charge of them, to deliver to Mr. Collins all the negroes in question. He will, of course, hold them subject to the lawful claims of all white persons. Abraham and his family should be excepted, in consequence of a promise made by General Jesup. The officers should be instructed to exercise due caution, so as to deliver only those captured by the Creeks. It is proper to remark, that it appears from a letter received from Lieutenant Sloan, that these Indians refused the $8,000 offered them, under the direction of General Jesup, for their interest in these negroes.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

C. A. HARRIS, Commissioner.

Captain S. COOPER, Acting Secretary of War.

This letter recites the order under which the Creek agent, Collins, was acting. Is there anything said here about General Watson? Not one word. This letter and this power of attorney speak for themselves. Collins, even according to his own showing, was the agent of the Creeks, and not of General Watson. And is the Government to be held for some clandestine private arrangement, that was not to see the light?

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama. I ask the gentleman from New York if this Government ratified this contract, if it is not binding upon it according to well-established principles, even if it was not cognizant at the time of the facts contained in it?

Mr. SACKETT. That is a proper subject for consideration, and I will come to it in due time.

Three or four months after the making of that contract, on the 18th of August, 1838, General Arbuckle, who then had these negroes with his command in Arkansas, recites the fact, that he had recently received two communications, one from the Secretary of War, and the other from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs at Washington, dated July 19th and the 21st of the same month, in which letters he expressly states, upon the authority of the Secretary of War and the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, that it was unknown at Washington that this money was paid for these negroes, even as late as the latter part of July, 1838. After all this, it is still claimed by those who advocate this claim, that the Government made and got up this contract. Was so absurd a claim ever before presented to this House?

Mr. DANIEL. If the Government had had no knowledge of the fact, it would not have recommended the payment of the money to General Watson with interest.

Mr. SACKETT. That was three or four years afterwards, after the claim had been got up. I am endeavoring to present the transaction as it took place. Here we have affirmative evidence that it is not substantially contradicted on the part of the claimants, that the Government knew nothing about the payment of this money; and we have also the positive evidence, as late as July, of the head of the War Department, and the head of the Indian Bureau, that they knew nothing of it. Now, where is the responsible connection of this Government with this transaction? Where can any man put his finger on a just ground of liability?

Mr. DANIEL. What Secretary of War was it who wrote this letter? These offices are continually shifting from hand to hand, and it may have been some subsequent Secretary or Superintendent who wrote the letters.

Mr. SACKETT. I have the letter, and will read it. It is dated the 22d of August, and is directed to Captain Armstrong, the acting superintendent of the Indian affairs in that region of country:

HEADQUARTERS, 2D DEPARTMENT, W. DIVISION,
FORT GIBSON, August 27, 1838.

SIR: I received by the last mail, from the honorable the Secretary of War, a communication under date of the 21st ultimo, on the subject of negroes captured by the Creek warriors, together with a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of War, under date of the 19th ultimo, relating to this subject; copies of which are herewith enclosed. All other papers or transactions in relation to this matter it is presumed that you are apprised of. It will be seen by the communication first referred to, that it was not known at Washington, at the date of that letter, that the Creek warriors had been paid for the negroes.

I am, sir, with much respect, your obedient servant,
M. ARBUCKLE, Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. A.
To Captain W. ARNSTROM, Acting Superintendent W. Territory, Choctaw Agency.

Here is a letter dated in August, in which it is stated that a communication had been received from the Secretary of War and from the head of the Indian Bureau, expressly repudiating the idea that the Government had any knowledge of this transaction.

Mr. DANIEL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will call his attention to a very great inconsistency under which he labors. When I referred him to the letter of Judge Iverson, a man of high character and standing, he said it was merely a letter, and not an affidavit. It did not serve his purpose to take into consideration the fact stated by Judge Iverson, but it does serve his purpose to take into consideration the mere statement, and not the affidavit, of General Arbuckle.

Mr. SACKETT. Well, if this claim is to be supported upon such criticism or evidence as that, I am entirely willing to submit it to the committee without further debate. What is the difference? Why, one is the indefinite recollection of an individual having no connection with the transaction whatever, fourteen years afterwards; and the other is the responsible correspondence of the Secretary of War and the head of the Indian Bureau. If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DANIEL] cannot see the difference in the character of the evidence, I have no doubt but this committee will. I think I have shown satisfactorily, that the Government never had anything to do with the making of this contract. But, on the contrary, I have shown, by evidence which would be satisfactory, I think, to any jury in the world, that, to say nothing of participation, they did not even know anything about the transaction.

I have now shown the nature and character of the original contract; the immateriality of the proposition of General Jesup in relation to the $8,000; and that the Government was not connected with this contract.

Mr. DANIEL. If the gentleman wants to get at the point, I will read a letter from J. R. Poinsett. It is not necessary to read the whole letter, but I will read this part:

"Mr. Watson's claim arises under the contract made by General Jesup with the Creek warriors, which was sanctioned by the Department, and the appropriation asked for is required to enable the Department to comply with that contract, and to carry it into effect, and upon its being met by Congress, this claim will also be paid."

This is a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, John W. Jones.

Mr. SACKETT. What is its date?

Mr. DANIEL. July 11th, 1840.

Mr. SACKETT. Yes, three years after this transaction, and a letter asking a general appropriation in relation to the Florida war, but having nothing to do with the merits of this case; it does not relate to this contract.

Mr. DANIEL. It is signed by Joel R. Poinsett, and I suppose it is in his handwriting.

Mr. SACKETT. It is like all the rest of the evidence in the case; and we need not go back to 1840, to get evidence that these efforts are still continued on the part of certain individuals, to secure to General Watson, who made this contract, the reimbursement of this money out of the Treasury of the United States, upon which, in my judgment, he has no more claim than any other losing speculator; that is still the very subject-matter now under consideration before us. There was no evidence in that letter as to whether the Government had anything to do with this contract with General Watson. Not a word. It is in relation to the contract made by General Jesup with the Indians, in relation to their becoming allies of the Government in the Florida war. Not a word in relation to this contract. It is for you to give it a broader construction, if you choose. I can find no ground for doing so. Give it its broadest and fullest construction, and it is the construction of the Secretary of War as to the validity of the contract of General Jesup, which is not now in controversy. Well, sir, we have heard of such things as Secretaries giving construction to contracts that Congress did not agree with. It is a construction as to the validity of a contract made by General Jesup, if you choose, but it has nothing to do with the question now under consideration. As I stated at the time of the interruption by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. DANIEL,] I have shown the nature of the contract; the immateriality of the proposition of General Jesup in relation to this matter; I have shown that the Government had nothing to do with the making of this contract; and as to these points I now leave them.

There are other considerations connected with this matter that are worth consideration; they are contemporaneous acts, which shed, at least, some light upon it.

On the 6th of March, 1837, the Government of the United States, through its proper authorities, made a treaty with the Seminole Indians. By that treaty, sir, which was made about two months before this contract of Watson was made, the Government agreed with the Seminoles, to guarantee these very negroes to them, and that they should go with them to the West. This treaty was made after the entire services of the Creek Indians. They actually went into the service in December, 1836, and were mustered out of service in September, 1837, before any hostilities took place between the Government and the Seminoles after this treaty. The treaty, I say, was made on the 6th of March, and its provisions, as contained in article fifth, are as follows:

"ART. 5. Major General Jesup, on behalf of the United States, agrees that the Seminoles and their allies, who come in and emigrate to the West, shall be secure in their lives and property; that their negroes, their bona fide property, shall accompany them to the West; and that their cattle and ponies shall be paid for by the United States, at a fair valuation."

Now, sir, what are we told? That after General Jesup had reported this treaty to the Government at Washington; after every department of the Government were entirely familiar with this solemn compact, by which the very property in controversy here had been guaranteed to the Seminoles, that this very Government, by the Secretary of War and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, were making a contract—that Watson, in violation of solemn treaty obligations, should absolutely take the property itself, and that the army should deliver it to him by force. Was there ever a greater absurdity? It is a charge against the late Secretary of War and Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which, if true, would be just ground of impeachment—a charge that they were, while in the public service, unlawfully and clandestinely trying to violate a solemn treaty of the Government. Sir, I am happy to say there is no evidence of such conduct on their part.

What, sir, has it come to this, that our highest officers are to be charged with clandestine schemes against the treaties of peace of the country. What higher offense could be charged against these men? Here was a solemn compact—and they had not one particle of authority of law to make, countenance, or encourage any contract whatever, or to bind the Government in any way, and still, without proof, for the purpose of sustaining this claim, they are charged with this gross violation of duty, viz: That they did in the face of this treaty, and with the full knowledge that it was in violation of its provisions, make, or cause to be made, a contract to take from the Seminoles the property the Government had, by treaty, only two months before guaranteed to them, and give and convey it to a stranger. They either were guilty of all this or they did nothing. Is there no evidence in this case against so violent a presumption? Does the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DANIEL] see nothing in this tending to show that the Government could have had nothing to do with the contract?

Mr. DANIEL. I understand about that, and there I think the gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension. His earnestness to defeat this bill causes him to see everything in a distorted view. I think there is something in that contract to operate upon, without operating upon these negroes, which by a previous contract with General Jesup, belongs to the Creek warriors. There were other slaves that surrendered themselves with the Seminoles at the time, and undoubtedly that contract referred to those slaves, and not to the slaves which had been captured under the previous arrangement made between General Jesup and the Creek warriors.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. General Jesup did, subsequently to the making of that contract with the Creeks, enter into a treaty with the Seminoles themselves; and prior to making the treaty with the Seminoles, the rights of these Creeks had attached, by the capture of this property. Then General Jesup makes the treaty, in which he stipulates that the negroes, the property of the Seminoles, should accompany them to their Western homes. Now admit that General Jesup has made a contract, and that one conflicts with the other, our rights attaching in the mean time, it may involve him in inconsistency, but it cannot defeat our rights.

Mr. SACKETT. There is no inconsistency on the part of General Jesup. He makes this treaty, reports it to the Government, it is agreed to by the Government as a treaty between the Seminoles and the Government of the United States, in which the Government agree that these very negroes, the property of the Seminoles, should go to the West with them. It is not claimed here that this treaty of General Jesup applied to anything which was not the property of the Seminoles, and there was not a single negro which it applied to taken between the 6th of March, and the time when this contract of Watson's was made. Therefore, the evidence is complete and perfect, that the Government had contracted in relation to this property by treaty, which was well known to its officers and to General Watson, and I contend this precludes the idea of any participation in this contract.

Another point, and I address myself now, not so much to the legal acumen of the House, not so much to the lawyers of the committee, as to the common sense of all. This property, if property at all, as claimed here—this claim, if a valid claim at all, covers property worth some $60,000. Those who advocate the claim, and those who oppose it, do not disagree about its value, as the evidence itself proves that point. The purchaser knew all about the condition of that property. Knowing this, and being perfectly acquainted with both propositions, its value and condition, he purchased that property for $14,600.

Now, sir, I ask any member of this committee, as a matter of fair inference, fair understanding, and bringing his mind to bear upon the original transaction, if it is not plain that a man purchasing property under such circumstances, intends to take the risk upon himself, and intend to rely upon the guarantee of this tribe of Indians, as to the validity of title. Is it possible we can close our eyes so tight, as not to see, that if a man purchases, with his eyes open, property worth five times the amount which he gives, and enters into a contract in which the United States is by no means a party, he intends to take that contract upon himself? What are we to do? Turn around after the space of fifteen or sixteen years, and say that this intention shall be reversed, because he was not fortunate in his speculation—because he did not succeed in making the speculation which he thought he should make out of it, and say that the Government of the United States will make up his loss? What possible interest has the Government of the United States, in any event, in this property? Admit the broadest construction claimed upon the other side, and the Government of the United States never had a single shilling of interest in it, in any form whatever. Suppose that it was a legitimate subject of contract, and suppose that it was proper for General Jesup, under the laws of the country, to make such a contract, and give it the construction sought to be placed upon it, upon the other side, and what interest was the Government, in any event, to have in the property? Not one farthing, in any form whatever. If these negroes belonged to the Creeks, it was because they had captured them, and we have nothing to do with them—were not, by the contract, bound to keep them for an hour. If we were bound to keep them, we were as much bound for ten years as ten days. We had no lawful possession of them except as prisoners of war.

It will be seen from the presentation of the points in this case, that the Government of the United States never assumed any direct responsibility in regard to this matter. The purchaser here purchased the character of property that he claims. If he lost out of it, it was his own loss; and if he gained by the speculation, as he thought that he would, it was his speculation. In either event, the Government had neither claim nor liability.

I do not know that it will be profitable to detain the committee any longer upon this subject. Perhaps, as proper to the elucidation of the subject, I ought to say a word upon another point; and I am sorry to say, that its presentation has a little something to do with the slavery view of the question; but it is necessary to the understanding of the subject. It is this: As to whether slavery existed in Florida at all? As I have said before, the presumption of law is against it. I think no lawyer will gainsay the proposition, that under the Constitution and laws of the United States the presumption is against the existence of slavery. I lay that down as a legal proposition. Under the law of some of the States, the question of color determines that question; but under the Constitution of the United States, the presumption is in favor of freedom.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I would ask the gentleman if it is not a rule of law, sanctioned by the Supreme Court of the United States, that in making their decisions they follow the decisions made in the States?

Mr. SACKETT. It is as the gentleman states it. Of course they would be governed by the laws of the State when they do not conflict with the laws of Congress. That does not touch this point at all. This point stands clear of all construction from State authority or jurisdiction. It is an important proposition, and one to be settled by the Constitution and laws of the United States; the laws of the Government that declare that all men are born free and equal. The question whether slavery existed among the Seminoles is a very wide field and very important subject for consideration, in which nothing can be taken by presumption—nothing can be taken by inference. It is a question to be determined by the absolute existence or non-existence of law; no presumption can create slavery among these Indians, but it must be established by proof of existing law. If slavery exists there at all, the question will naturally arise, what kind of slavery existed there? What sort of bondage was it? Was it the bondage of the African race, or the bondage of the Seminole race? Was it slavery from year to year, or was it slavery from generation to generation? Was it slavery by which the parties enslaved became liberated after a certain period of time? How was the relation of the enslaved to be changed by this operation of General Watson?

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JOHNSON] alluded to the letter of General Taylor, in which he made a statement in reference to this transaction. Without taking time to read the letter, I will only state that General Taylor washed his hands entirely of this transaction. He did not consider that these men were slaves. I will read the letter, however:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE SOUTH, }
TAMPA, (FLORIDA), June 2, 1838. }

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge your communication of the 10th of May, 1838, accompanied by one of the 9th, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, addressed to Captain Cooper, acting Secretary of War, on the subject of turning over certain negroes captured by the Creek warriors in Florida to a Mr. Collins, their agent, in compliance with an engagement of General Jesup.

I know nothing of the negroes in question, nor of the subject, further than what is contained in the communication above referred to; but I must state distinctly, for the information of all concerned, that while I shall hold myself ever ready to do the utmost in my power to get the Indians and their negroes out of Florida, as well as to remove them to their new homes west of the Mississippi, I cannot for a moment consent to meddle in this transaction, or to be concerned for the benefit of Mr. Collins, the Creek Indians, or any one else; or to interfere, in any way, between the Indians and their negroes, which may have a tendency to deprive the former of their property, and reduce the latter from a comparative state of freedom to that of slavery; at the same time, I shall take every means to obtain and restore to his lawful owner any slave among the Indians who has absconded or been captured by them.

Very respectfully, I have the honor to be, General, your obedient servant.

Z. TAYLOR.

Major Brig. Gen. United States Army, commanding.
General R. JOSE, Adjutant General United States Army,
Washington, D. C.

That was something like a year after the transaction.

In October, 1838, this whole transaction, so far as this contract is concerned, is still in the dark; and even at that late day, Mr. Collins, the agent, writes to the Secretary of War, to see if some arrangement cannot be made with the Creeks, so as to enable his principal to get his money back. The following is his letter:

TUSKEGEE, (ALABAMA), October 18, 1838.

Sir: I have previously advised you of my failure, as agent of the Creek warriors, in obtaining possession of the Seminole negroes that you had directed to be turned over to them, and the difficulties and opposition that attended it.

I have now to request, that should General Arbuckle be unable to comply with the instructions I understand he has received, (which, from my knowledge of Indian character, I have no doubt he will,) this claim may be laid before the agent who may be appointed to investigate the claims of the Creeks, with the necessary documents, that it may be examined and reported on by him.

Will you inform me who the agent will be, and the time and place of the investigation, that I may be present to represent this claim?

From my long and intimate acquaintance with the Creeks, I was enabled, while there, to allay any excitement likely to be produced on this subject, and prevented, for the present, any attempt on their part to take possession of the negroes, by the promise that the Government would ultimately satisfy them.

With the highest respect, I am yours, &c.,

N. F. COLLINS.

Hon. JOEL R. POINSETT,
Secretary of War, Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON. Collins was the agent of the Indians.

Mr. SACKETT. He was never the agent of the Creeks, except in this transaction. He was the agent of the Choctaws.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Collins was the agent.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. Armstrong was the man who had the money; but that is immaterial. Collins was following up these negroes as late as the 18th October, expressly avowing himself the agent of the Creeks, when he writes to the Secretary of War—Mr. Poinsett—that he has not been able to possess himself of them, and suggests whether there may not be a claim made before the Creek Indians themselves—they having guaranteed their title to these negroes—to indemnify Watson, his principal, and requests the Secretary of War to let him know when the agent of the Creeks will be acting upon that subject, that he may have the matter presented. Then there was no thought of making a claim against this Government: that was an after-thought, probably the invention of some claims agent—a sort of Galphin, where agents and owners go snucks.

[Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled, "An act making land warrants assignable," which received the signature of the Speaker.]

Mr. EVANS. I do not propose to detain the committee more than fifteen minutes, so that if any gentleman desires to address the House he may then be ready to obtain it. This is a funny affair altogether, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] has elaborated it in the most scientific manner; so much so, that I apprehend he has put it beyond the comprehension of a jury. So far as I understand, this whole case lies in a few facts, and if gentlemen will give me a little of their patience I will endeavor to make it plain. There are several gentlemen upon this floor who have a remembrance of Judge Iverson. I had the honor of serving with him here. Those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance know that a more polite and courteously deported gentleman—a gentleman whose statement can more entirely be relied upon, cannot be found upon this floor, or outside of this Hall. In all his actions, and in his behavior here, he displayed what he was—a Georgia gentleman. The gentleman from New York stated that he had passed over Judge Iverson's letter—that he had not read it, but had heard it read: that it was loose, rambling, and disconnected, and showed a failure of memory, and that it related to facts occurring thirteen years ago. It is true that it related to occurrences which took place thirteen or fourteen years ago, but it is not rambling, nor does it show any failure of the memory; on the contrary, it is stated with the utmost positiveness and clearness, and is conclusive upon one branch of the facts involved in this case. Mr. Iverson says that the Department of Indian Affairs sanctioned, nay, brought about this sale of negroes; negotiated it and fixed the price. I suppose that is the Government, and if not, there are abundant communications—letters written parallel with the occurrence—showing that the Secretary of War authorized all of the transactions with regard to it. The letters are here with the signature of Mr. Poinsett attached to them. Now, sir, the reading of these papers is not an interesting matter for anybody. I will take this one; Judge Iverson, a witness whose character is known to us all, says:

"Shortly after the return of the warriors composing what was called the Creek regiment, enlisted by General Jesup, in 1836, to serve in the Florida war against the Seminoles, and the removal of said warriors with their families, to the Creek nation West, General James C. Watson and myself were deputed as agents from the Alabama Emigrating Company (who removed the Creeks under contract) to the city of Washington, to settle up the accounts of said company with the Government. When we arrived in Washington, we found General Armstrong, Indian agent, in the city, with a delegation of Creek chiefs. A proposition was immediately made to General Watson and myself, by Carey C. Harris, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to purchase a large lot of negroes, then claimed by said Creek regiment, and represented to be at the time in the custody of the United States, at Fort King, near New Orleans. The proposition was declined by me, but I was personally acquainted with most of the facts and conversations which occurred between the Department, the Indian Agent, Armstrong, and General Watson, and learned the following particulars: That these negroes had been captured in Florida by the Creek regiment, from hostile Seminoles; that agreeably to an agreement made with said regiment by General Jesup, they were to have all the property of the hostiles which they could capture, and they claimed these negroes; that General Armstrong and the delegation in Washington had authority to dispose of or sell their claim to these negroes; that the Seminoles who had emigrated to the West were very averse to allowing these negroes to go into the possession of the Creeks; that the Creeks were equally determined, when they arrived West, to seize and subject them to their own service. The War Department apprehended that serious difficulty would grow out of this conflicting claim, and that war would ensue between the Creeks and Seminoles in the contest for the negroes. It was deemed by the Department prudent, and indeed necessary, to prevent blood-shed and war between the two tribes, that the negroes should not be sent to the West, but should be sold in the United States. Hence the proposition from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to General Watson, to purchase the negroes. General Watson hesitated for several days, but being urged by Mr. Harris, and assured that the negroes would be delivered to his agent immediately, he consented to buy them, and paid the price fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and General Armstrong, the agent. An order was issued from the Department, and an agent dispatched by General Watson to New Orleans, to receive the negroes. The United States officers in charge of them refused to deliver them; they were transported to Fort Gibson, and turned over to General Arbuckle, as I have been informed, and were by him surrendered to the Seminole Indians, or turned loose and joined them; so that they were wholly lost to General Watson. Given under my hand this 19th December, 1851. ALFRED IVERSON.

"DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington:

"This day came before me, Nicholas B. Van Zandt, a justice of the peace in and for the county aforesaid, the above named Alfred Iverson, who made oath to the truth of the above and foregoing statement. Witness my hand and official attestation, this 19th December, 1851.

"N. B. VAN ZANDT, Justice of Peace."

Now, the United States had the property in its possession. That is the first position. The Secretary of War, the gentleman from New York says, had not sanctioned this Indian negro business. I am astonished at the gentleman. I am really surprised at his statement with this mass of evidence, of manuscript documents before him, which he might read if he would. In these documents is an assent of the Government, so far as the assent of the War Department will give it.

Mr. SACKETT. Where does the gentleman find that?

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Kentucky has the document. He will give it to you. Besides that, the printed books are full of it. It seems to me no one can miss who wants to look for it, unless there be a desire to escape the fact. I do not mean to say the gentleman has such a desire, but I think his professions have made him overlook what is immediately before him. I do not care a straw whether the documents contain the asserted matter or not. The Government of the United States had the negroes in possession, and it was extremely desirous to prevent a war. Now, I understand that the secret at the bottom of the whole of this matter was to prevent war between the Creeks and Seminoles, which would not cost us $15,000 merely, but $15,000,000. And we made a cheap bargain in this matter—one of the best bargains we could have made.

Mr. WELCH. It is, and has been alleged, that the principal reason assigned by the Secretary of War, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or whatever officer of Government who had this matter in charge, for advising or consenting to the sale of these negroes by the Creeks, was to prevent a difficulty and a war between the two nations of Indians—the Creeks and the Seminoles—when they should be removed to the West. The query I wish to propound is this: It will be found in several places in the voluminous correspondence which has been before the committee in regard to this matter, that the difficulty in separating the negroes, the slaves, as they are called, from the Seminoles, was found principally in the fact, that the Seminoles objected to their going into slavery in the service of white men. That, I think, General Armstrong states to be the fact. That was the final reason, the final difficulty, why they would not surrender them: that they should go along with them as their allies, and not be surrendered into slavery in the service of the white men. I wish to know how this difficulty would be relieved that it was apprehended might occur between two nations of Indians. The difficulty existed in the fact that both parties claimed the negroes. By allowing the one party, the Creeks, to sell their right to the negroes, and put them in what the Seminoles considered a worse condition, a condition which constituted the principal ground of their objection, could not remedy the difficulty.

Mr. SACKETT. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me—

Mr. EVANS. One inquiry at a time. Let me answer the gentleman from Ohio before interrogating me anew.

Mr. SACKETT. The gentleman says that I misstated—

Mr. EVANS. I do not say that you misstated the evidence.

Mr. SACKETT. I state now, that the letter which the gentleman produced as evidence that the Government had a knowledge of this contract, states no such fact.

Mr. EVANS. That brings up the document, then. Now, as the gentleman has made a point between us, though it has nothing to do with the case, I will read the letter. I did not propose to enter upon this matter at all, and only wanted to speak a few minutes to things that were relevant to the case; but since the gentleman has brought this matter up, I will read this letter of the 9th of May to Mr. Harris:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, May 9, 1838. }

Sir: The decision made a few days since, that the negroes captured by the Creek warriors in Florida should, in compliance with the engagement of General Jesup, be delivered to the delegation now here, has been communicated to them, with the intimation that when they had determined what disposition would be made of them, and communicated information of the same to this department, the necessary orders would be issued. In a communication just received from the delegation, they state they have appointed Nathaniel F. Collins, of Alabama, their attorney in fact, to receive the negroes. I have the honor to request that an order may be issued to the commanding officer at Fort Pike, to Major Isaac Clark, at New Orleans, to the commanding officer in Florida, and to any other officers who may have charge of them, to deliver to Mr. Collins all the negroes in question. He will, of course, hold them subject to the lawful claims of all white persons. Abraham and his family should be excepted, in consequence of a promise made by General Jesup. The officers should be instructed to exercise due caution, so as to deliver only those captured by the Creeks. It is proper to remark, that it appears, from a letter received from Lieutenant Sloan, that these Indians refused the $8,000 offered them, under the direction of General Jesup, for their interest in these negroes.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

C. A. HARRIS, Commissioner.

Captain S. COOPER, Acting Secretary of War.

Here is the next letter from Mr. Harris, the same day—the very day of the sale:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, May 9, 1838. }

Sir: I have the honor to transmit, herewith, the copy of a communication made to the Secretary of War, and which has been returned by him to this office, with his approval indorsed upon it. I request that you will cause an order, such as is indicated in this paper, to be given as soon as practicable to the officers mentioned in it. I am not at present aware that it will be necessary to give an order to any other than those named. I will thank you to cause me to be furnished with a copy of the orders issued, that Mr. Collins may be furnished with all proper papers.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

C. A. HARRIS, Commissioner.

Major General MACOMB, Commanding in Chief.

And also a letter from the Adjutant General:

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, May 10, 1838. }

Sir: Herewith you will receive a copy of a communication to the Secretary of War by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The request contained therein having been approved by the Secretary, you will please to give the necessary attention to the matter, so far as you are concerned, and comply with the requisition of Mr. Collins.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Major General JESUP, Commanding Army in Florida, Tampa, Florida.
Brevet Major ZANTZINGER, Fort Pike, Louisiana.

There is a fact for you. There is the fact of the sale communicated to the Secretary of War, and he has so indorsed upon the back of it, for the requirement, mark, is, that the negroes be delivered to Mr. Collins, who was the agent of the purchaser. Can evidence of assent to a sale be stronger?

Mr. SACKETT. Is there anything said about the sale?

Mr. EVANS. Let the committee judge between us. They all hear what there is in this letter. I give the gentleman facts, but I cannot, as Dr. Johnson said in a parallel case, give him that spirit and discrimination of mind which will enable him to perceive them in a proper light. Yes, here are the facts. There was never a clearer indorsement; but it is not of the slightest importance upon the face of the globe whether it is so or not. It is a fact, that the Government was in possession of these negroes after a sale took place, with or without the knowledge of that Government. I will, for the sake of argument, admit, as the gentleman said, that the Government is without this knowledge, though the proof says that they had such knowledge. I do not care one straw whether they knew about the sale when it took place or not. I assert this to be true: If a sale of property, being in trust in my possession, is made to individuals, I am bound to deliver it, and if I allow it to be eluded and carried off, I am responsible for its value. If I accept the trust in the formal manner in which it was accepted by the Government, and do not carry it into effect, and the property is carried off, whether I knew of the sale or not, I am responsible for the property, much more, when I, myself, as the Government did, carry it off, and neglect, and refuse to make delivery. Neither does it make any difference whether these persons were property or not, if the Government be considered as making the sale, or as standing by and inducing a third party to make the purchase. Suppose the negroes were property. If they are, and the sale takes place with the consent of the United States, which has the article sold in possession, the Government is bound to make the delivery. If it fails to make delivery, it is bound for the consideration. Suppose they are not property. In that case, the title of the thing sold fails, and the party selling is called upon to make restitution of the value received, because he could give no valid title, nor make any valid delivery. In either case, he who has received money for which he has given no consideration must refund.

Now, let us imagine that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] had been sold by the Government, which had received the money, and he is clearly entitled to his freedom, and seems to take it, too. [Laughter.] Suppose, I say, the gentleman had been sold by these Indians, the Government guaranteeing to make the delivery, I would like to know if they are not obliged, not only in equity but law, to refund the consideration money if they do not, or for defect of title cannot make the delivery? Does any one deny this? Has not the Government received money for property which the Government had in possession?—for consideration to the Indians was consideration to the Government then, and the spirit of all the papers showed it, no matter whether the thing sold was property or not. The Government allowed it to be carried off, and did not deliver it, and is that Government not bound to make restitution? Now, the Government did make a sale, and there is no use of dodging it; though it is of no importance whether they made it or not, for the United States induced the sale, brought it about, fixed the price, and ordered delivery, and then failed to fulfill the order, and that is the point of the case. But they did make the sale. No sober, candid man can look at all of these documents, and at the history of the whole transaction, and avoid saying that it was the Government who made this sale of these negroes on behalf of the Indians, besides having arranged it long before the capture that they should be the property of the Creeks, to be delivered to them or their authorized agents. They received the money. It was a consideration to prevent the shedding of blood upon your territory; a consideration which ought to hallow itself to the mind of every Representative here—a consideration which prevented expenses which now would have borne heavily upon us, and would have been to this day unpaid. It is an amount of money which you are bound in equity, in honor, and at law to refund to these parties. What difference is it, I repeat, whether what they sold was property or not? If it was property, they did not deliver it, and they are bound to refund the consideration. If it was not property, they are bound to refund the consideration, because they could make no title to it. But bound the Government is, if not for this reason—which I only allude to because it has been much dwelled upon on the other side—certainly for the reason that, whether they knew of the sale or not, assented or not, they held these negroes as the property of the Indians, and then, after notice of the sale, after themselves fixing the price, they eluded the property. For, whether the War Department was cognizant of the sale or not, we had the property and did not deliver it. According to my views of the matter, then, we are bound to pay the money, and there is no use of going into a rambling discussion about General Arbuckle or about General Taylor, who was, by the way, only talking about a delivery of such negroes as belonged to white owners. The committee can judge about the facts. All else is irrelevant, and there is no use of lugging in all these things and embarrassing the minds of the committee with such an accumulation of matter.

Mr. SACKETT. If the Government were bound to deliver, according to the terms of the order of the Indian Department, to the Creek Indians—for that was the term used—there will be no disagreement about that. If they were bound to deliver according to the terms of that order, they would be bound only to deliver such negroes as the Creek warriors took. That manifestly would be the case. If General Watson, in the mean time, had stepped in and purchased, his rights would not be larger than the rights of the Creeks themselves. The evidence in the case, in regard to these negroes, is—and it is the difficulty in the case—that the Creeks took none of these negroes.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman has shifted his ground. Now he has got up a new difficulty; but there is this simple answer to it: There is no reason for any identification. That was a point which the Government ought to have made by a reservation of the property, and not allow it to be carried off to be dispersed all over the Western territory, and through the Western and Southern States, and then for persons, on behalf of the Government, fourteen years afterwards, to come forward and say that it is impossible to identify this property. At this day it is a little too late to make that point.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me to make a single remark? The gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] says that there was no identity of the negroes proved. There was no attempt to identify them; and why? Because it was seen, that if they could be identified, they could not be delivered. The Indians were determined not to go west unless the negroes went with them. There was no effort, therefore, to identify them, and it was useless to do so.

Mr. EVANS. I have no doubt it was quite useless, and I thank the gentleman for the interruption. I think the case is sufficiently clear, and I now bid it farewell.

Mr. STUART next obtained the floor and said: Mr. Chairman, if this were an ordinary question, I should not detain the committee at all in regard to it. It is one which was raised when I had the honor of being a member of the Thirtieth Congress, which I partially examined at that time, and which I have more thoroughly examined within the last few days. The object that I have in rising now is not so much to endeavor to enlighten this committee, as to place upon record the reasons which will control my own vote, and I shall be very much obliged to the committee, I confess, if they will give me ordinary attention. I have come to the conclusion that this is a case in which the Government is clearly liable, and I can state, I think, in a very few words, the reasons which have induced that conclusion in my mind. The views which I take, steer entirely clear of the difficulties which seem to obstruct the progress of other gentlemen. The question whether these individuals were slaves or not, in fact, is one which it is not necessary to determine. The question whether the title to them, was perfect in the Seminoles or not, is not now necessary to be determined in the views which I now submit. The question of whether the Government of the United States made a contract or not, is equally unimportant. But, sir, there are certain prominent, leading facts, clearly shown by the evidence in this case, about which, I think, gentlemen who have examined it, will not dispute for one moment, and if they are not disputed, they seem to me to lead an unprejudiced and unbiased mind to the conclusion at which I have arrived as clearly and irresistibly, as a man will be ready to believe that it is light at mid-day when the sun is uninterruptedly shining.

Now, sir, what are those facts? General Jesup made a contract with certain Creek warriors by which he agreed to give them the plunder that they should capture from the Seminoles. If it was necessary, I think I should have no difficulty whatever in satisfying the committee that negroes were held as property at the place where the contract was made and where it was to be executed. But it is not necessary to determine that question, because there is a leading principle which governs all contracts in all the courts in every portion of the civilized world, with which I have any acquaintance, and that is this, that the interpretation that the parties themselves place upon the contract is the interpretation to be given to it by the courts in carrying it out.

Now, the evidence in this case, is superabundant to show that the Creek warriors, that General Jesup, that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that the Secretary of War, and every man that had anything to do with this question from the commencement to the end—that all these parties have regarded the slaves of the Seminoles as coming within the purview of the contract.

Well, sir, after that contract had been made, a certain number of slaves were captured by the Creeks. General Jesup, in a letter written in 1845, says, that most of those captured by the Creek warriors were females and children, and that most of the men were captured by the regular soldiers. He went into an investigation of that subject himself, and came to the conclusion that the proportion due to the Creek warriors under that agreement was $8,000, and offered to give them that amount, but they declined to receive it. I am not going into the evidence, but am stating facts deducible from that evidence. Well, not long after this a new negotiation was entered into here in Washington, by which Watson bought out the interest of the Creek warriors, be it great or small in those slaves. And here I would remark, that whether that interest was great or small—whether it covered one negro or two hundred—whatever it might be, is a matter entirely unimportant, except in a contingency which I shall hereafter allude to. He bought the interest of the Creek warriors in that property, whatever it might turn out to be—in seventy individuals understood to be slaves, and admitted to be within the contract made by General Jesup, that number of individuals being, at the same moment, in the custody, and under the power and control of the officers of the United States.

Now, sir, this agreement was made known to the Government of the United States. They issued an order for the delivery of this property to Collins. For reasons best known to themselves, however, Collins was represented as the agent of the Creek Indians. But that makes no difference. He went after the property. The army officers of the United States refused to deliver it. Any man who examines the evidence, will find this remarkable fact, that in consequence of the peculiarity of that contract, there was a curious manœuvring running through the whole army of the United States, with a view to send these slaves with the Seminoles to the West. At the same time, each officer intended to act, and did so act, in point of fact, that you cannot fix the responsibility upon any living man of them. The result was, that Mr. Collins began at the point where General Jesup represents these slaves to have been in custody, and following them to the outer border of Arkansas, was unable to get control of one single person. In 1845, General Jesup explains this fact. He says, in this language substantially, I protested against the execution of that order, and I believe I was very instrumental in preventing its execution, by the delivery of those negroes.

Here let me call the attention of the committee to an important fact. This took place at a season of great difficulty—the removal of the Seminole Indians out of Florida to the West. That was the great point to be arrived at. These army officers saw that the Seminoles would never leave that country unless they could take their slaves with them, and for the reason, among others, that some of them had intermarried with the negroes. After they had made the treaty with General Jesup, which has been alluded to, they came to a stand, and said they would never move an inch in execution of the contract they had made, unless their negroes were permitted to go with them.

Now, I disagree with the construction referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. DANIEL.] I think that the treaty which was entered into by General Jesup with the Seminole Indians, covered all their property—that which had been captured from them, as well as that which they retained. Now, I think that one of the very strongest points in the case. The Government of the United States knew that this contract had been made by General Jesup; they knew that Watson had purchased the right to these negroes, and yet, with that full knowledge, for prudential reasons, they saw fit, through their own agents, the officers of the army of the United States, whose action bound the Government, to send this property out of the reach of the man who had purchased it.

Now, let me ask this committee a question. Suppose there had been no such knowledge on the part of the officers of the United States; suppose it rested solely upon the contract existing between General Jesup and the Creek warriors, which was made by General Jesup with a view to give them a right to some portion of those slaves; and suppose the Government of the United States, interposing with its strong arm for the purpose of removing the Seminole Indians, had sent their slaves along with them, is there any doubt of the liability of the Government to the Creek Indians under that agreement? I take it, there can be none. Is there any doubt that Watson had purchased that property, or the right they had to it, from the Creek Indians? Well, if he had, then it is immaterial whether the Government knew of the purchase or not, if they interposed with the strong arm of their power, and prevented the delivery of that property. Would it not give a right of action, between individuals, against the individual thus interposing to put the property beyond his reach? Why, there is no doubt of that. But the conclusion is made more irresistible from the fact that the Government did know this. They knew of the existence of this agreement, and aided in getting it up. Now, how do we stand? Why, there is but one way in the world in which this claim can be defeated, even upon technical grounds, and that is this: If a gentleman buys property of me, and a third gentleman interposes and puts that property beyond his reach, and an action is brought against that third gentleman, and he seeks to evade a recovery, how can he do it? Why, by proving to the jury beyond all cavil that I had no title, and therefore did not sell any. Now, if the Government of the United States, in this case, could escape this thing in any way under the sun, it is that. They must show conclusively that not one single one of these individuals was so far a slave of the Seminoles as to convey any title whatever to the Creeks; and hence none could be conveyed to Watson. Now, we turn round here—being our own arbiters in our own case—and say to this claimant, You are bound to show that one of these individuals was a slave. We shirk the responsibility that the law imposes on every man in dealing between individuals. The onus probandi is upon us; and unless we can show that there was not a particle of property taken by the Creek warriors under the arrangement by General Jesup, and that there was none therefore transferred to Watson, we cannot even technically evade this claim. But then, when we rise above this technical consideration, and meet this question upon the principles of fairness; when we concede that, by our own offers, we induced this man to purchase this property; that by our Commissioner of Indian Affairs we fixed the amount of that purchase; that we asked him to do it because we did not wish these negroes to be sent to the West—because that was the ground upon which the Government interposed; they did not want these negroes sent West, to be a constant source of quarrel and difficulty between the Creeks and Seminoles, who were then to become neighbors—why, there is not a single question left that this Government is not as clearly liable to pay this money, and the interest upon it from the time it was advanced, as it is that a man is liable to pay his own note when in his own admitted handwriting. The liability in the bill before the committee is reduced to the smallest amount that can be claimed. No doubt, upon the law of the case, we would be liable to pay in full for the seventy negroes; but the bill avoids all that, and simply proposes to refund to this man the money he advanced, with six per cent. interest upon it from the time he paid it.

A Voice. Are there no expenses charged?

Mr. STUART. No, sir; there is not a word of expense in the bill. One gentleman before, today, told us there were expenses charged. But I have examined it, and find that they are contained in the report, but not in the bill. The bill does not propose to pay one single dollar, except to refund the money that we, ourselves, induced this man to pay, and six per cent. upon it since the time he paid it. Now, I ask, is there a man here, who, in just such a case in an individual transaction, would hesitate for a moment to pay it?

Mr. SKELTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, since he undertakes to make the case a very clear one. I would like to inquire if it is lawful in this or any other country to sell prisoners of war into slavery? Upon this question rests the merits of the case. If it cannot be maintained that it is lawful to sell prisoners of war, I do not see upon what this claim rests.

Mr. STUART. If I had time, I think I could show most clearly what effect that question has upon the case under consideration. I think if this Government goes into a slave State, and offers to a regiment of Indians all the slaves they shall capture from the enemy in that State where slavery is recognized as an existing institution, I could show most clearly that it was bound to carry out that contract, just as certainly as if I were to go into a slave State and offer a man $200,000 for his plantation, and his personal property, which would comprehend all the slaves.

Mr. SKELTON. If the gentleman will allow me, it does not appear from positive evidence that these men were absolutely slaves previous to their capture.

Mr. STUART. If the gentleman will examine the testimony in this case, he will find that it is equally clear upon this point. It is proved both by the existing laws of the country, and the facts existing in the case. It is very clear that these negroes were, by the Seminoles, claimed as slaves. Now, it lies upon us, as I said some time ago, if we wish to escape the liability, to show that they were not slaves. If precisely the same facts existed between two honorable gentlemen upon this floor that exist in this case, as I said, not one of us would hesitate when the question of refunding the money came up.

Now, sir, in conclusion, I will say that there has been a vast deal said, within these walls and elsewhere, of the condition of this country, growing out of this very question of slavery. That question has been amplified to any extent necessary to suit the particular views of any person who might at the time be speaking upon the subject. Mr. Chairman, I have ever believed what I now say, that no course of policy can be pursued by the representatives of the people upon this floor, better calculated to quiet irritation upon this subject, to allay all fear, all animosity, to prevent all future peril to the union of these States, than to treat every question growing out of it precisely as if it grew out of any other subject; to regard the question as our fathers who framed the Constitution regarded it—as an existing fact for which they were not responsible, and to leave it just as they found it. And although we may fall short of the patriotism which pervaded the bosoms of that body of great men, let us attempt, feebly as it may be, to imitate that illustrious example. With these views, I have endeavored to shape my course upon this claim, precisely as if the great question of slavery were not reached by it. Sir, I conjure gentlemen, from my heart—I conjure gentlemen from the North and the South to examine this case, to talk of it, and to vote on it as if it were a claim growing out of any species of property, recognized as property anywhere in this Union. Let them do that, and they will find the facts as I have stated them, and they will come to the same conclusion which I have stated, and which I now recapitulate. They will find that those Creek Indians gained a certain right, under their contract with General Jesup; that right they sold to Mr. Watson, and Mr. Watson has been prevented from its enjoyment by the direct interposition of this Government, through its army officers. They will further see that interposition was for reasons amply sufficient, and such as would have controlled the action of any gentleman here, had he been substituted for those army officers. They acted wisely and prudently; and they are entitled to the highest encomiums for their course by this Congress and the country, for relieving the country of this incubus which weighed it down—by relieving the country of what was otherwise not only an expensive, but a merciless war. I have no sickly sensibility upon this subject, especially such as was indicated the other day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JOHN W. HOWE.] And the history of this country is too full of those bloody pictures, showing the character of savage warfare; too many men, women, and children, have been butchered in cold blood, to make me entertain any particular fancy for Indians. That, too, is an evil with which we have had to contend, and let us dispose of it like statesmen.

Mr. BARTLETT obtained the floor, but yielded to—

Mr. HAMILTON, who moved that the committee do now rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. CHANDLER] reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar generally, and particularly House bill 136, for the relief of the legal heirs of James C. Watson, late of the State of Georgia, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. ALLISON moved that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MEACHAM demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered—33 rising in the affirmative.

Mr. M. then withdrew the motion.

Mr. ORR moved the usual resolution to close debate on the bill last under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CHANDLER moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. EWING moved that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. STANLY demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion, which were ordered; and, being taken, the result was—yeas 24, nays 95.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. POLK. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn until Monday?

A Voice. How did you vote?

Mr. POLK. I voted no. I ask if my motion does not take precedence of the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to believe that it is competent for this House to fix the day to which it will adjourn, and that such a motion has precedence over a motion to adjourn.

Mr. POLK. The reason why I make the motion—

A Voice. It is not debatable.

Mr. POLK. If I cannot state my reasons I feel, like other gentlemen, that this motion to adjourn will be read against me.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order? Does the gentleman insist upon his motion?

Mr. POLK. Not unless I can give my reasons. The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn, and agreed to.

The House then adjourned till to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 20, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PROSPER M. WETMORE.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up from the table a message of the President, in response to a resolution which I had the honor to offer some two months ago, in reference to the accounts of Prosper M. Wetmore. I desire to take it up in order to move, without debate, that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill upon the Speaker's table?

Mr. ORR. It is not, but upon the table of the House.

There being no objection, the communication was taken up and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RESOLUTIONS OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California, by unanimous consent, introduced two several joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California:

1st. Joint resolution in reference to the moneys collected in the ports of California previous to her admission into the Federal Union.

2d. Joint resolution relative to an increase of salary of the United States district judges in California.

The joint resolutions were severally read and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the resolution closing debate upon the deficiency bill be so amended as to read, "within one hour after it shall have been next taken up for consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union."

Mr. STANLY. I thought that the House, by general consent, had agreed that the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] should be concurred in, but with the understanding that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] upon the Committee of Ways and Means, should also have an hour. We are in a minority upon it, and it is but fair that we should be heard upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I had a conversation with that gentleman, [Mr. Brooks,] and I told him that I would assent to it upon his making a request for it upon the floor of the House; and as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] now requests it, I assent to it, and ask the unanimous consent of the House, that the resolution closing debate be amended, so as to close debate in two hours instead of one hour, as I first requested.

Mr. HOUSTON. I shall not object to it, but I want to make a suggestion. The gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] as I understand it, and as he has frankly told the House, intends to discuss some amendment, which he proposes to make to the bill when it comes up—an amendment which, he and I agree, is important, and which I would really like to hear discussed. I have not the most remote objection to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] as one of the members of the Committee of Ways and Means, making a speech; indeed, I prefer that he should do it. But then I should like that this agreement be so extended, that some other member of the Committee of Ways and Means might meet the arguments of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] in regard to the amendment which he may offer; for in my closing remarks I shall not have time to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that. My fear was that some one would object to such a proposition, if made. If it be not objected to, I will say three hours; but if objected to, I will adhere to the proposition for an extension of two hours.

A VOICE. Two is enough.

There being no objection, the proposition of Mr. JOHNSON, extending the debate two hours, was agreed to.

Mr. KING, of New York. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I ask my colleague to withdraw his motion, until some communications upon the Speaker's table be taken up and referred. There are some of much importance, which should be referred, that the committees may take action upon them. I will further say that there is the Patent Office Report, which should be referred, that the proper committee may act upon it in reference to the question of printing it.

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent, provided it be referred without debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object to it.

Mr. HASCALL, by unanimous consent, presented a petition from inhabitants of Wyoming county, New York, praying that the bounty land bill passed in 1850, be so amended as that all the heirs of a deceased beneficiary, under that act, be entitled to hold the land of their deceased ancestor, instead of the minor heirs only; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. KING, of New York, to go into committee, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. VENABLE in the chair.)

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the House bill No. 207, making appropriation to supply deficiencies in former appropriations for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852, and upon that bill the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire, sir, to explain to this House in a plain manner—and I do not know that I could do so in any other manner if I desired it—some of the features of the deficiency bill now before this committee for consideration. I shall only touch that portion of the bill which relates to the Indian service. The Bureau of Indian Affairs, finding that a large portion of their estimates had been rejected by the Committee of Ways and Means, called the attention of the Committee on Indians Affairs to the fact, and requested that they would look into it and see if they approved of the estimates of that bureau; and if so, to offer the rejected items to the House as amendments to the bill. That committee have, several times, had the various items, which have been rejected, under consideration.

On a considerable number of those items—rejected items—they ordered me, as chairman of the committee, to submit amendments to this House, so that they might be considered and adopted, if the House should approve of them. Upon an examination of the estimates of the Indian Department, sir, I find—I think it is some thirty-two items—the estimates furnished for this deficiency bill by that bureau; and, if I am correct in it, some thirteen items were rejected out of the number, and I think there were some three or four items more reduced from the amounts that were estimated, and submitted as necessary to the service. I have not made a very precise examination, but there are certainly two thirds of the estimates of the bureau which have been stricken out altogether, and more than two thirds of the amount have been either stricken out or reduced by the Committee of Ways and Means. Well, the bureau has got into a very strange condition—they have come to a very strange pass, when they offer an estimate under their own responsibility, and for which they are responsible to a higher department, as well as to the people of the United States, of more than triple the sum that is necessary for the service of the Government. If it be true, sir, that those estimates which have been made were necessary to the performance of the service of the country, or to comply with the just obligations of the United States, I imagine that this House would unanimously say that those estimates ought to be adopted.

The grounds upon which those estimates have been adopted, sir, and the facts and laws relating to them, I will attempt, in as condensed a method, and in as brief time, as possible, to explain to the House, and I do not think it probable that I shall consume the hour to which I am entitled in making this explanation. If, sir, it is found, however, that those estimates which have been made are not necessary to the service of the country, nor are necessary to the proper discharge of the obligations of this Government, then, sir, there is a degree of censure which must be thrown upon those who have furnished them to this House, which I am, sir, at a loss to characterize.

There is a species of general objection which exists, I believe, upon the part of the Committee of Ways and Means to a number of the items in this bill, so far as it relates to Indian affairs. Sir, in speaking of the deficiency bill, I hope I may be clearly understood as speaking of that part of it exclusively relating to Indian affairs. There is a species of general objection which is, that among the items objected to here, there are none to be found as coming properly within the character of a deficiency. I am not good at definition, but I think the substance of the definition of a deficiency, as applicable to this bill, would be a case where there has been an amount already appropriated for a given object, and there has resulted upon an effort to execute that object, a necessity for further appropriation. A deficiency bill, from its title, is a supplemental bill altogether, and is instituted to supply wants, resulting from precedent inadequate provision. But if this deficiency bill is to be confined exclusively to this class of cases, and none other, then, upon examination into this bill, it will be found that they (the committee) have not inserted five items which are a legitimate portion of such a bill.

Then, sir, there originates, from the nature of our legislation, and the condition of business in this House, an absolute necessity that this House should act upon the estimates offered, and should couple with the deficiency bill many items, whether they come strictly within the class of deficiency or not. I say that there exists an absolute necessity that these estimates should be acted upon in this bill, if they are to be acted upon at all, and I will explain to you the reason why. It is this, sir: This deficiency bill is here presented—it is before the House, based upon the estimates already made to be provided for as deficiency, and whilst they are rejected, the deficiency bill is permitted to lie by for months, and is not acted upon at all, until the estimates for the regular expenditures in the Indian service have been furnished to this House, and the bill for regular service is actually upon the table and reported for the use of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am sure my friend wants to do justice to those who acted upon that bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Most certainly I do.

Mr. HOUSTON. The deficiency was not reported. The deficiency had not reached the Ways and Means Committee when the regular Indian appropriation bill was reported to the House. We did not know of it at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Without looking at that, and admitting the correctness of what the gentleman says, which I do, I say before-hand, if these estimates here are not allowed in this bill, they cannot, and will not, come in for appropriation this year, in the regular bill, as the committee allege would be proper, if proper at all, because the regular bill is already reported to the House; and no Committee of Ways and Means has ever become famous for offering amendments to their own bills after reporting them, and particularly no committee which is disposed to no particular extravagance, and disposed to force the public expenditure into as narrow a compass as it is possible to do. So these items recommended for this bill, though they be just and right, cannot come in at all; they will be lost; and though they be obligations of the Government, obligations liquidated and acknowledged, still they must go by for another year. If they be essential to the public service, and if we are compelled to submit to this view, they must be passed by altogether, unless the Committee of Ways and Means can be induced to adopt them as amendments, and throw them into the bill, which has been reported to the House and referred, although not yet considered. With these preliminary remarks, I will proceed to consider the rejected estimates in detail.

The first item which is rejected, by reference to the estimates, will be found to be the second section. It is:

"For payment to the Seneca Indians of New York, for moneys wrongfully withheld from them by an agent appointed by the Government for the management of their affairs, as per report of Thomas B. Stoddard, Esq., commissioner, selected by the Secretary of War to make the requisite investigation, pursuant to the direction contained in the 4th section of the act of 27th June, 1846, making appropriations for the Indian Department."

That, sir, is an item of $28,505. I will state to the House in general terms the history of this matter. From time—I was about to say immemorial—from a very distant period back, we had agents among this tribe; and it has been always the case, that those agents had been in the habit of receiving the money of those Indians, and doing so whether due to them by this Government or the State of New York, or by banks, or by individuals. They have been in the habit of receiving such moneys, and of paying out, applying, or investing them, in any manner which the commissioner, or the tribe, or owner should direct. This method of conducting their affairs had continued for many years, and is explained in the copy of a letter which I have here; until an agent of the name of Stryker was appointed, and that agent, during a period of some three years, robbed them of money amounting to $28,000, and some odd hundreds. This occurred in 1837, 1838, and 1839. Now, the question is, what position does the United States occupy in reference to this loss? Those who oppose the paying of this amount to those Indians, oppose an obligation absolutely admitted by the Government of the United States. Those who oppose it say that the United States have paid these Indians all they owe them, and paid them through their agent—that this $28,000 was money due these Indians from private individuals, and paid into the hands of their agents, and that the United States had nothing to do with the transaction. That is the statement, sir.

Now, sir, if the United States acted as the trustee of these Indians, and received that money, and then, as trustee, failed to account to them for the money, the Government is compelled, not only by equity and justice, but by their own precedents in numberless cases, to pay to these Indians any losses they may have sustained by confiding to this Government, through her agent, their means in the manner which has been specified, and which will be clearly proved by the papers, if anybody will examine them. The only question seems to me to be this; and I shall not spend much time in this case, nor dwell upon it any longer than is necessary to take up those points where the difficulties exist, and leave the rest to any one who may speak after me, in the event they may wish to say something about it. Well, sir, besides it appearing that it was the habit of that tribe of Indians to confide and pay over all their money into the hands of the United States agent, as trustee, for safe keeping, investment, or distribution, or to allow it to be done by their debtors; besides it appearing in this report, we have the exact language, in a letter from the office of the Secretary of War, authorizing it, in 1832, long before that agent was appointed, showing that such was the habit of the Government. That it was contemplated to continue, the Indians presumed, and we must presume; and we have no evidence of any character or kind to show that the authority for it has ever been countermanded or changed. From the office of the Secretary of War a letter was issued, dated August 11, 1832, addressed to the agent of that tribe of Indians. I will read that letter, and gentlemen will then see the authority that was given to the agent to act as the trustee of the funds of the Indians, as well as the representative of the Government of the United States, for the Six Nations of the New York Indians. Full and entire authority was given to him as agent, and the United States, through him, is compelled to stand in the attitude of a trustee. Here is the direct language of the Government. I will read it to the House:

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, August 11, 1832.

SIR: You are hereby authorized, the consent of the Indians being first obtained, to receive all moneys, and securities for moneys, belonging to, or due to the Seneca Nation of Indians; to discharge all mortgages or other securities of record, and to make investments of such moneys, from time to time, on the most favorable terms, and to do all other things necessary to the faithful fulfillment of this trust.

Whenever an existing mortgage or other security is canceled, you will notify the Department thereof, and whenever you take new securities, you will cause them to be recorded in the proper office of the country, and their sufficiency certified by the district attorney, or the judge of the United States court. They will be prepared in triplicate. One copy, upon which will be entered an attested copy of the record, you will transmit to the Department; one you will give to the Indians, and one you will retain.

The assent of the Senecas to your acting in this matter as their agent or trustee, must be obtained in writing, and the original forwarded to this Department.

You will be careful, in all your investments, to have them so executed, that the Indians may, without unreasonable delay, obtain possession of the principal, should their removal or other circumstances render it desirable.

I am, &c.,

JOHN ROBB,

Acting Secretary of War.

JAMES STRYKER, Esq.

Here is not only assent, but an absolute order. Now, it may be said that the assent cannot be shown in writing. In regard to that, we cannot require, in order to exonerate ourselves from the payment of this money, that the assent shall be shown to be in writing, because this method of transacting their business by the agent had long been established, and no instruction had been given to the effect that their assent in writing was necessary to secure the honesty of the agent, or responsibility of this Government. To quibble upon such a point would be to treat with derision a powerless class, as ignorant and defenseless as they exhibit themselves confiding. Their assent is perfect to their eyes, when they have placed their funds in the hands of the Government of their Great Father, or allowed them to be so placed, without a further assent put in writing. Besides this, it is clearly established that the Government always acted as trustee in all such cases, and it cannot be said that the Indians shall be responsible for the assent not being in writing, because that is an order which was given by this Government to her own agent, a regulation for her own protection, and not an order or regulation transmitted and made known to these Indians, showing that to obtain for them the security of this Government they had to furnish the assent in writing. In that case, it would not only be proper, but absolutely essential that the Indians should transmit their assent in writing to the proper office here. Any other regulation or disposition of the written assent would have been absurd, particularly the placing of it in the agent's hands; and no such notice was given, nor any such action required of them.

This assent might have been given forty times over to this agent, and he, being determined to defraud them out of their money, could have and may have chosen never to have transmitted it, and thus the Indians themselves would have lost, and the Government of the United States at the same time would have been deprived of its recourse upon the party that was making the default. The instruction created a trusteeship in so many words; besides that, it had existed from the beginning, by custom. The requisition by the Government of a written assent, and communicated to its own agent only, was utterly inadequate, and if now set up as a defense against repaying the trust money, is a fraud by a great nation upon an ignorant, powerless, defenseless, defrauded, and confiding, unfortunate race. I will not go into a further examination of this case—it is clear to any fair mind, and my time is limited. If the gentleman, or any other gentleman, wishes to reply to this, I will exhibit all the documents, and point out where these facts may be ascertained. I will then state that we have the evidence here of the repeated action of the Government as trustee for these Indians; and where the Government has appointed an agent that has been faithless to them, received their money, and appropriated it to his own use, she is bound to pay that money, if she acts justly by them. This is the condition of that particular item. The Committee of Ways and Means have rejected that item of some $28,000. That money has been due, if due at all, to them since 1837, 1838, and 1839. For not one cent of the estimate is interest proposed to be allowed by the Department. This estimate embraces only the principal, and it is but sheer justice. If it were a dealing between individuals, it would not be deemed justice—that, after the principal had been due for so long a time, it was proposed not to pay a cent of interest with it.

Now, I do not propose to insert any clause for interest, because I am inclined to oppose the payment of interest upon claims against the Government. I shall desire it to be an extraordinary case where I would vote for the payment of interest at all, after having heard that subject discussed so frequently in the Halls of this House. There is the amount, and there can be no other objection to the payment of it than that the item does not sound like a deficiency. If it is not a deficiency, what is it? It is an obligation of this Government; but, say they also, it is a private claim, and should go to another committee than that of Ways and Means. It is no more a private claim than is the claim of Mexico upon us, under our treaty with her, a private one. It is an obligation to a people whose independence we, in some measure, acknowledged. An obligation of this Government, whether it exists by treaty or by other and voluntary action, when acknowledged by us, in any shape, is just as sacred, and ought to be as faithfully complied with, as one made and put under the seal of the Secretary of State, and indorsed with the sanction of the Senate. There can be no distinction between classes of obligations upon this Government. It is her duty and her honor to discharge them all. The obligation in one instance is as sacred as it is in the other; and if we owe the money, it ought to be paid. As to the mere consideration whether it belongs to this bill or not, according to form, I will say it is a matter of moonshine. The Committee of Ways and Means are the ministers of the House to consider the amounts of the disbursements of the public moneys. They are to offer all appropriations, for the discharge of the honest obligations of this Government, growing out of its relations with other nations and with our Indian tribes. This item is of that class, and if it does not now come within this bill, and is not now adopted, it will not be adopted for the coming year. We cannot then know when it will be adopted, since, having been once recommended by the Government and rejected, or passed over in this way, it may not be again presented for consideration. It will have to be rejected, for I shall offer the amendment. We cannot hope that the Executive will take upon itself, after Congress shall have acted upon it in this manner, rejecting it, ever to recommend again this item.

I will ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, whether or not—as it may save me some trouble—his committee have gone into an examination of the item with regard to the Pottawatomies? If they have gone into a full examination of it, I am satisfied that it would be unnecessary for me to explain it here. It is an obligation existing under treaty, and it is a deficiency item.

Mr. HOUSTON. In reply to the gentleman from Arkansas, I will say this: when we had up the estimates submitted to us in relation to the Indians, upon which the gentleman is now commenting, we called before us the chief clerk of the Indian Bureau; and in the investigation of these items, one by one, we were not able to find the treaty upon which this Pottawatomie claim was said to be based. We gave him a memorandum in regard to that, and the Choctaw claim, and he was to furnish us with the information, which to this day he has not done. We have not, therefore, been able to carry the investigation any further.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will read the third section of the treaty of February 11, 1837, concluded in the city of Washington:

"POTTAWATOMIE TREATY—ART. 3. The United States further agree to convey, by patent, to the Pottawatomies, of Indiana, a tract of country on the Osage River, west of the Missouri River, sufficient in extent, and adapted to their habits and wants; remove them to the same, furnish them with one year's subsistence after their arrival there, and pay the expenses of this treaty, and of this delegation, now in this city. (See p. 533, Statutes at Large, vol. —, Indian Treaties.)

Under that clause of the treaty the remnant of that tribe, amounting to six hundred and thirty-nine, have been removed. There was upon hand in the Department, a portion of an existing appropriation, unexpended, for the removal of this residue. At the time of emigration, the Secretary of the Interior thought, and estimated, that the number would amount to some four hundred Indians, but when collected and emigrated, there proved to be some six hundred and thirty-nine. The amount asked for in section eleven, of the estimates, to enable the Government to pay for the removal of these Indians, and to continue their subsistence for the residue of the year, is $22,500. These Indians are now being supplied and subsisted, at the point to which they have been removed, and there is not one cent for the purpose of paying what has been done, or for the continuance of the subsistence to which they are entitled by treaty. I presume this will be satisfactory to that committee. I have given them the facts, and they can examine the records if they require further information upon this point.

The next item is numbered twelve in the estimates, and is, for the subsistence and removal of the Choctaws, $50,000. Having had some conversation with the chairman in regard to this item, I will ask him (to save trouble) whether the committee have reconsidered and determined to insert that item, or whether they are still opposed to its adoption?

Mr. HOUSTON. We have not reconsidered it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, they have still determined that that item of $50,000 shall be kept out of the deficiency bill. By the treaty of the 27th of September, 1830, article sixteen, the Choctaws were stipulated to be removed. I will ask the gentleman to do me the favor to turn to the article in reference to, and of which I am now speaking, as the book is in his hand. By article fourteen of the same treaty, the right was granted to such Choctaws as chose to accept it, to become citizens—that is those who preferred to remain, should become citizens after five years' residence. They were, if they adopted this provision of the treaty, to receive a fee simple title at the expiration of the five years, to certain lands which were to be reserved to them. All that did not choose to remain were to be removed West, and subsisted there for one year. I will repeat, by the fourteenth section, such as preferred it were at liberty to remain where they were, and to take their stipulated amount of land, and after remaining for five years, according to the terms of that section of the treaty, they were to become citizens of the United States, and were to receive a patent for the land which had been granted them. I repeat this, because it is important that we should remember that there are two distinct provisions, either to be elected at the option of any Choctaw.

"ART. 14. Each Choctaw head of a family being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States, shall be permitted to do so, by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of this treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of six hundred and forty acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one half that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him, over ten years of age; and a quarter section to such child as may be under ten years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside upon said lands intending to become citizens of the States, for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue; said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family, or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."

"ART. 16. In wagons; and with steamboats as may be found necessary—the United States agree to remove the Indians to their new homes at their expense and under the care of discreet and careful persons, who will be kind and brotherly to them. They agree to furnish them with ample corn and beef, or pork for themselves and families for twelve months after reaching their new homes.

"It is agreed further that the United States will take all their cattle, at the valuation of some discreet person to be appointed by the President, and the same shall be paid for in money after their arrival at their new homes; or other cattle such as may be desired shall be furnished them, notice being given through their agent of their wishes upon this subject before their removal, that time to supply the demand may be afforded."

As I have shown to you, the larger part of the nation went off West. About one thousand of them selected to remain East, and take reservations of land. The Government of the United States at this point utterly failed, and this is an admitted fact, and which will not be disputed, to secure to them the lands which they had thus agreed to reserve, and patent to them under the fourteenth section recited, but proceeded to sell the lands and utterly violate the stipulation. The evidence is, too, that it was done in many instances in a most brutal manner. The Indians were then left there in a helpless condition, defrauded of their lands. When the attention of the Government was called to this subsequently, the shame and injustice was recognized and acknowledged, and in order to remunerate them, it was determined to issue land scrip to these Indians to a large amount. It was provided that one half should be paid to them where they were, in Mississippi and Alabama, and the other half should be paid to them only after they had passed west of the Mississippi. See act of 23d of August, 1842. By that act the Government destroyed the alternate provision of the treaty, that is, the provision by which the Indians could remain there. And having violated it themselves, those Indians who had chosen to remain under the fourteenth section were compelled and driven to emigration west; and for that purpose to resort to their rights under the sixteenth section. So the objection which is raised, that this Government is not bound to pay for their emigration, altogether falls to the ground; because if the Government violated the section of the treaty under which they were to remain, and compelled them to emigrate, how is it to be expected that they can emigrate under the terms of that treaty, unless they emigrate through the provisions made under and by virtue of it for their emigration? Any other construction despoils them of every real benefit under a treaty that was horrible to them at best. But to show you that the objection which I understand exists, is not a sound or good one, and that it has never been offered or entertained by any but this committee, I have only to say, that the Government, from the very time they had violated so unjustly their plighted faith, in regard to the fourteenth section, and these reservations of land, selling and destroying the right and title of the Indians to them, had actually continued to emigrate them, and pay for them under the sixteenth article of the treaty. Sir, that gentlemen should come in here and say that these $50,000 ought not to be appropriated for the purpose of paying their emigration, because they had chosen to remain there under another provision of the treaty, is not, it seems to me, good sense or common honesty. It is certainly not justice or equity in the slightest degree. Those Indians must have some benefit of that treaty, in some shape or other, and the clause of the treaty, under which they determined to remain, was destroyed in all its benefits to them, and they were cut off, precluded, and despoiled, the Government acknowledging the fact. That they had a right to revert, and under the sixteenth section of the treaty, to accept its terms of emigration, the expenses of it, and subsistence for one year, in another country, to be paid by the Government, there can be none, the remotest, rational doubt. The Government, too, have proceeded to emigrate them from year to year, for the last fifteen years, under the sixteenth article, and this is the first time that such an objection has ever been made to the payment of the bills for their emigration. It is the first time that this matter has ever been made a matter of contest or objection—at least within my term of service here. This is an ample explanation, I take it, of all the points of that case. And, therefore, I will go no farther into the investigation, until I hear points made upon the subject, and when I do, as I feel myself familiar with the facts, I will then take them up, and give a further explanation. I do know this from a thorough investigation of the case, that we are bound to emigrate them, and pay the expenses. We have already acted in bad faith in many instances in regard to this very treaty. I believe this Government has already acted as badly as a Government could in regard to the particular provisions of that treaty, and it but remains for us, under a crude decision of the Committee of Ways and Means, to reject our obligations under it altogether, to consummate an ill faith almost unequalled.

Many of the items in this bill I will have to pass over, and for the reason that there are some seventeen items which demand explanation. Many of these items are simple, plain, and easily explained. I shall pass all such as those, however, until the five minutes debate comes on. It is only to those items that are somewhat complicated that I shall now address myself, under the privilege of the House which has been granted to me.

The next item is for the liquidated balance due to the Creek Indians, for losses sustained during the last war with Great Britain—sustained by all that portion of the tribe who were friendly to, and cooperated with, the United States.

Preceding that, is an item to pay William Heart for losses connected with the removal of the Choc-taws west. That item, number nineteen, for the payment of Heart, has been rejected also by the Committee of Ways and Means. I have looked into it somewhat, and although I do not say that I have made up my own mind in regard to it, I will say this, that I am by no means satisfied that the Committee of Ways and Means were wrong in rejecting it. On the contrary, I am inclined to believe that the Committee of Ways and Means were right in rejecting that item of some $37,000. After looking into it with some little care, I shall not myself, unless instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, hereafter, offer any amendment to that section.

I will ask attention to the next section, which provides for the liquidated balance due to the Creek Indians for losses sustained during the last war with Great Britain. The origin of this claim is well stated in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Orlando Brown, to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, of May 10th, 1850; and I will follow the direction given by that report, with such explanation, as I progress, as may suggest itself. It is a report made, not by the committee of the Senate, but it is a report from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, made to the Senate. It contains an explicit and authoritative statement of the facts, and if the House will examine it, and give it their attention, they will find a most extraordinary state of things; besides that, the indebtedness is unquestionable, and is admitted, after full investigation, by the Government. It is an item of $110,417.

During the late war with Great Britain, a large portion of the Creek Indians, who were friendly and resided next to our settlements, united with us in that war against the hostile Indians of their own tribe. The House will recollect that a severe war raged at that time in the Southwest, during which General Jackson acquired the greater part of his high and deserved reputation as a military commander. In the progress of that war, the friendly Creeks rendered preëminent services, and it is but sheer justice to say, that to their skill, valor, and intimate knowledge of the country, were due much of the glory and good fortune that attended the American arms against, at that time, the most powerful and warlike native race on the continent of America.

In giving an account of this claim, I will adopt, in a great measure, the statement of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The claim is one adjudicated by the Government of the United States, and now stands clearly admitted as an obligation of ours after a full and fair investigation and adjustment under the immediate direction of the proper Department of the Government. The exposition of the Commissioner begins in this way:

"The claim originated during the said war, and is for losses sustained in consequence of the claimants taking part with, and remaining friendly to, the United States. It is based on the promise embodied in a communication from General Thomas Pinckney to Colonel Benjamin Hawkins, United States agent for the Creek tribe, of the 23d April, 1814, in which was stated the terms upon which peace would be granted to the hostile portion of the tribe, viz: 'that the United States will retain so much of the conquered territory as may appear to the Government thereof to be a just indemnity for the expenses of the war, and as a resti-tion for the injuries sustained by its citizens, and the friendly Creek Indians.'"

This is the language of a Major General, commanding your forces in time of war, who acted with full authority in such matters. He further commands the agent, Hawkins, as follows:

"You will please, sir, to communicate these terms to the friendly Indians, and to enjoin them, in the prosecution of the war against such as may continue hostile, to abstain carefully from injuring those who may be returning, with the intention of making their submission. You may likewise inform them that the United States will not forget their fidelity; but, in the arrangements which may be made of the lands to be retained as indemnity, their claims will be respected; and such of their chiefs as have distinguished themselves by their exertion and valor in the common cause, will also receive a remuneration in the ceded lands, and in such manner as the Government may direct."

This was delivered by that gentleman to this friendly tribe of Indians, as a promise made to them by the commander-in-chief of the American forces, so as to continue them faithfully in their devotion to the United States, in the prosecution of that war. How soon were these promises to be violated? How soon were we destined to exhibit clearly, that the Government, their Great Father—God save the mark—had forgot their fidelity! and, worse than all, to exhibit the revolting spectacle of a powerful Government turning, at the conclusion of a protracted and bloody war, upon an humble and faithful, but weak, defenseless, and confiding ally, to despoil them, and actually despoiling them, under the plea of motives of policy, of millions of acres of land, giving no even seemingly adequate compensation therefor. I will read an extract, and I request that the references contained in the extract may be examined, if you would see the most startling developments regarding our good faith to these helpless allies:

"Those propositions resulted in the treaty concluded by General Jackson, August 9, 1814, by which the Indian title was extinguished to between fourteen and fifteen millions of acres of land. Prior to signing the treaty, the friendly Indians called the attention of General Jackson to the promise of General Pinckney, with a view that a provision should be inserted for the remuneration for their losses; but the General declined, because his power to negotiate did not extend to embrace by treaty, or capitulation, the promises contained therein. The Indians, however, agreed to sign the treaty on the condition, among others, that the said promise should be sent on with the treaty—saying, we rely on the justice of the United States to cause justice to be done us." (See American State papers, vol. 1, pp. 837, 837, and 858.)

I imagine this House will be astonished when I tell them, in addition to this palpable repudiation and disregard of Pinckney's promise, that it is an admitted and uncontroverted fact, that of the fourteen or fifteen millions of acres taken professedly from the hostiles, as indemnity for the expenses of that war, from one and a half to eight millions were the lands of these our own suffering allies.

Sir, this House ought to be confounded, when I tell them, that it is an uncontroverted fact, that of the fourteen or fifteen millions taken for that war—I cannot say precisely what amount, but it is variously estimated at five, or six, or eight millions by some, and at a million and a half by others—of the lands of the friendly Creeks, that large amount was taken without the most remote or tolerable equivalent being given as a consideration. Those who fought for the United States, against the hostile Creeks, had their towns besieged, their houses burned, their people butchered, and property destroyed; and they themselves, when the treaty was made and indemnity taken for the expenses of the war, lost by the indemnity taken, from a million and a half to eight millions of their lands. This claim is not based upon that fact, however, but strange to say, has become confounded with it, in some correspondence, in such way as materially to have delayed the payment of this just obligation for losses and injuries.

This would indicate that the Government has not acted with great justice and forbearance, remembering the faithfulness of that party of Indians during that war. Sir, it has been seldom that the Government of the United States—say what we will in regard to our philanthropy—has acted with justice to the Indians; it has been seldom that the Indian could rely safely on the justice of the United States. Instances of the most glaring fraud, under the name of "treaty," will be found to fill almost every page of the present volume of treaties made between the United States and the Indians; if the driving of rich and unequal bargains, and the total inadequacy of consideration, can be said to constitute a fraud. From the commencement of this Government to the present time, when the Indian would not part with his possessions for considerations utterly inadequate—considerations which we would never think of accepting from or of offering to our own citizens—it has been our custom to trespass upon them, until they were driven to wage war to the knife. We have, then, butchered them, and taken their lands from them as indemnity for the expense and trouble of the operation, and if any remained that escaped the knife, they have been driven to a strange location, to seek a livelihood on grounds to them unknown and unexplored, or to meet death at the hands of some more powerful tribe. This has been a portion, too truly, of the history of the Indian on the whole of this continent, and even from its first settlement. Yet, among ourselves, we are ever speaking of philanthropy towards these people, who are unable to defend themselves; and the moment there comes up a bill calling upon the Government to do them an act, not of mercy, but of justice, the forms of legislation are allowed to interfere, and gentlemen are found to get up and quibble and cavil, and every technicality that can be raised, and every obstacle that can be thrown in the way, is availed of, and the fairness, and equity, and justice, and humanity of the country is betrayed and abandoned.

But to return: there was a solemn pledge given by this Government, that we would pay the "losses and injuries" sustained by this tribe, when they stood by our side and fought against their own people and the British. But the payment of this money is now opposed by some, on the ground that it is so long since 1816—the time when this claim originated—that it would seem as if there was something wrong about it. Then why do they not investigate? They are invited to do so. No, they would prefer to rest on limitation, that dishonest bar for a government, and continue the crying shame. Why, sir, this claim was pressed in 1815, '16, '17, '18, '19, and '24, until the Committee of Ways and Means of that day (1824) made a report utterly adverse, and from that time forward, the Indians, yielding in despair to their helpless but usual destiny, for many years we hear nothing of this claim.

For a few years past, they have renewed the matter, however, hoping that their appeal to another generation may be more successful; and, on full and minute investigation by the Bureau of Indian Affairs of all the records in this case, they have settled the matter that the claim is just—that the Committee of Ways and Means of that distant day were in error. The Department has, therefore, estimated for the amount due at that day, but they make no estimate for interest. I do not approve the propriety of a government paying interest, and I have never understood that these unfortunate people demand it. But it is plain that the principal, if due in 1815, '16, should be paid without hesitation in 1852. Has the committee a heart that could deny it? Those propositions to which I have referred, resulted in the treaty concluded by General Jackson on the 9th of August, 1814, by which the Indian title was extinguished to between fourteen millions and fifteen millions of acres of land. The Indians agreed to sign the treaty on the condition that the promise made to them should be sent on with the treaty—saying, they would rely on the Government of the United States to see that justice was done them.

"By reference to the Indian treaties, it will be seen that, by the treaty of 1814, the cession to the United States was intended to compensate the Government for the expenses of the war with the hostile Creek Indians, that it was strictly of a military character—more of the character of a capitulation, with a pledge for indemnity, than an ordinary civil compact."

Now, some may doubt whether the pledges of General Pinckney are binding upon the Government. The following extract will remove all doubt upon that point:

"On the 29th August, 1815, the War Department informed Colonel Benjamin Hawkins, the Creek agent, that 'it is the wish of the President that you should proceed to the liquidation of the claim of the friendly Indians to indemnity, upon the principles of General Pinckney's and your letter to them.' The result to be transmitted to the Department, to be laid before the President for his ultimate decision and approbation."

That is a clear recognition on the part of the War Department, then having control of Indian affairs, of this obligation.

"On the 1st April, 1816, Colonel Hawkins made his report 'on the claims of the friendly Indians for losses sustained by them in their civil war, agreeably to the terms of 'peace offered by Major General Pinckney, 23d April, 1814, and the preliminaries to the treaty of Fort Jackson, of August following.' He states that it is imperfect, from the peculiar situation of affairs there, and cannot be otherwise 'till all the hunters are in, which is not expected till the last of next month.'

"According to the data before him, the aggregate of the claims which had been presented amounted to $148,415 12½, and the amount of the same reported on favorably, to $78,360 75; and he states that, from the best information he has obtained, the whole amount of just claims will not exceed $100,000."

In every instance when the Government acted upon this matter, it recognized the validity of the promises of indemnity, to the friendly Creeks for "losses and injuries," without quibble or equivocation.

This being so, the language of General Pinckney is important. What was it? I will not repeat it, as it is already stated verbatim. But I will ask, is it a promise of partial indemnity, a promise that a part shall be paid, and part left unpaid? No, no. In war ourselves, needing their service, their valor, and assistance, it was an explicit promise from an authorized quarter, of full pay for all losses and injuries sustained, as well as full respect for their landed possessions, after peace was made. This last promise was shamefully violated, and the first, now, after thirty-eight years, is still unfulfilled.

But was there coupled with the promise of Pinckney any provision as to how the losses should be ascertained? No. Then, how were they ascertained? In the first place, under instruction of the Government to the agent, our own officer, Benjamin Hawkins, who died before he completed the investigation; but who reported before he died $78,360 75 of good claims for losses, &c., and his distinct acknowledgment, that the investigation was not concluded, and how many more remained he did not know, but he guessed $100,000 would cover the whole amount.

What was this guess worth? We will see; but if I may speak in anticipation of the argument, I must say it has proved, if we may judge from the manner in which the case has been treated, as of so much value, that the truth, fidelity, and honor of the Government, have been periled upon it for thirty-eight years, and for thirty-eight years they have been sacrificed. What was this guess of agent Hawkins worth? It was held at that day, worth nothing. Of the $100,000 it expressed, only $85,000 was appropriated, and that not in full, and, the Government appointed a successor who proceeded, not upon the guess, but according to instructions, and liquidated clearly, the amounts of loss, admitting the valid, and rejecting the spurious accounts. The process of examination was by the Chiefs and our own agent, and was satisfactory. Imputation has never been thrown upon this settlement. We hear of no complaint at that day, except that it was more than the first agent guessed. It was consummated in accordance with the solemn promise of the Government, and in obedience to her instructions, and under her own eye and guidance. And shall we take the guess of our agent, because it is in our favor, against the sworn, full investigation of the same subject-matter, under the same instructions, of another agent, his successor? It would exhibit us, anxious indeed, to escape and repudiate our solemn obligations to a helpless and dependent people.

But it was the report of the Committee of Ways and Means of 1824 that finally drove these Indians to despair. It was enough to have driven them to insanity, if preposterous injustice could have effected such a result. It was certainly enough to satisfy them of the hopelessness of the white man's honor, to his dependent Indian neighbor, upon any question of interest. That committee, not satisfied with preposterously adopting the doubts thrown upon the returns of agent Mitchell, after full investigation, in consequence of the $100,000 guess of his predecessor, goes back to a statement of that same predecessor, made in 1814, at the conclusion of peace, two years anterior, in which Hawkins states, that "he believed at the time of the drawing of the lines of the lands for the treaty, $60,000 would have been received as an equivalent, and concludes, that after such a belief expressed as that, no more than the $85,000 should be paid."

The $60,000 expression had reference, it is reasonable, at least, to suspect, in a letter so confusedly written, to the equivalent for the lands of which these friendly Indians were despoiled. But even supposing it referred to indemnity for personal losses, still, the same agent, after partial investigation, admits, two years afterwards, over $78,000—estimates there must be $100,000 of good claims to indemnity—and acknowledges the investigation altogether incomplete; and also, that the Upper Towns, which have much the larger claims, have refused to hold intercourse with him on the subject, in consequence of their resistance to the injustice of the treaty, which despoils them of their lands without equivalent or compensation.

Sir, I will argue it no further. Let us do this act of justice, long, too long, and too shamefully delayed. The account I herewith state:

1. Amounts liquidated for Upper Towns, at Fort Hawkins, in July, 1817.....	$77,572 50
Deduct this amount, paid at the same time.....	31,029 00	$46,543 50
2. Amounts liquidated for Lower Towns, at Fort Hawkins, in July, 1817.....	29,775 00
Deduct this amount, paid at same time.....	11,910 00	17 865 00
3. Miscellaneous claims, liquidated at Fort Hawkins, in July, 1817.....	27,157 00
Deduct this sum, paid to these claims.....	10,862 00	16,295 00
4. Amount liquidated at the agency in 1818.....	49,524 00
Deduct this amount, paid to these claims.....	19,809 60	29,714 40
Whole balance due.....		110,417 90

It is proved they lost to that amount. It contains no estimate of the hardships endured, the blood that was spilt, and the lives lost by them, in a war where their brother Indians pursued them with more bitter violence than the whites, to the destruction of their towns, their women, and children, and in a war in our own behalf. Neither does it contain any estimate for a half century of interest. We are able to pay, and should scorn to ask, after thirty-eight years, whether it is proper to do it in a deficiency bill, or in some other (to critics on petty etiquette) more formal legislative method.

Mr. BROOKS obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. JOHNSON, who said: I would state to the House, if they desire to be further informed with regard to this subject, that by reference to the last part of this volume, (the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs,) and the last communication but one of the Indian Bureau, they will find a full statement of the case; and after the perusal of that statement, there could not exist a doubt in the mind of any gentleman who is disposed to do justice in the case, that we ought to pay this claim.

Mr. FREEMAN. I move that the gentleman from Arkansas have the unanimous consent of the House to go on with his explanation in this matter. He seems to be well informed in relation to it; and in my opinion, the time of the committee could not be better occupied than in receiving the information. I hope there will be no objection to giving him a quarter of an hour more.

The CHAIRMAN. This committee have no right to grant this privilege. The House have decided that debate shall be closed in two hours, and the committee must execute the order of the House.

Mr. FREEMAN. I understand it is competent for the House, by unanimous consent, to suspend the rules at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Not in committee. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped, when this deficiency bill was taken up for consideration, that debate upon it would be confined to the merits of the bill itself.

Mr. MEADE, (interrupting.) Surely it is in the power of this committee, by unanimous consent, to grant the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] the privilege to proceed with his remarks. I cannot doubt but that the committee have that power.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very decided in the opinion that it is not competent for the committee to grant it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman must be aware that this committee cannot suspend the rules of the House.

Mr. MEADE. It is competent for the committee to sit here for half an hour without doing anything; and if that be so, I presume they can allow the gentleman from Arkansas to go on with his speech for half that time; for he only desires fifteen minutes to explain this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very clear in the opinion that the committee have no power to allow the gentleman from Arkansas to proceed, and he so decides.

Mr. MEADE. Well, sir, if it is the pleasure of the committee to hear the gentleman from Arkansas, I will take an appeal from the Chair, and I do it to relieve the Chair from its decision.

Mr. STANLY. In the event that the decision of the Chair is overruled, and the gentleman from Arkansas is allowed to go on with his speech, I desire to know what will be the effect of that decision when the hour arrives at which the House have ordered the debate to close? Will the Chair arrest it, or permit the gentleman from New York still to have his hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will certainly arrest the debate at the time at which the House has ordered it to close.

Mr. JOHNSON. Under these circumstances, of course I cannot consent to go on. I do not desire to take the time from the gentleman from New York. I hope, however, that when we get into debate under the five minutes rule, the committee will allow me to state some facts which I am precluded from doing now.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is out of order.

Mr. COBB. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. JOHNSON,] whether document No. 30 does not embrace all the facts to which he alludes?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir, it does not embrace all; but it embraces enough to enable gentlemen to investigate the matter for themselves, if they desire to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must again remind gentlemen that debate is out of order. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. BROOKS said: I was about to remark that I had hoped that when this deficiency bill came up, there would be a free, open, and legitimate discussion upon its merits. I had hoped that the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means would have availed himself of his right, under the rules, to address the committee for one hour, and that he would have given his exposition of the bill, so that some cue or clue could have been given to the discussion, and so that I might seem to be addressing myself in reply to something which might have been said upon this floor, rather than to things which, if not said here, are said elsewhere. But the health of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means was such that he was not able to avail himself of that privilege; and, therefore, I am placed in the somewhat embarrassing position of vindicating a bill, which has not exactly been attacked upon the floor of this House, except by the incidental remarks yesterday of the honorable gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] or some like incidental remarks, the other day, from an honorable gentleman from Tennessee.

EXECUTIVE ESTIMATES AND CONGRESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

I propose, in the first place, to ask the attention of the House to the estimates of this Administration, and the necessities of the country, that demanded them. It has been remarked, and truly, too, that the Administration is bound to make its estimates, and is responsible for them; but the House of Representatives is not less bound to vote those estimates, if they are founded upon a correct judgment of the necessities of the country, and that in voting them, it indorses them, and is equally responsible, with the Administration, for them. This, I say, frankly and freely, and I would have no misunderstanding about it. It will not do to say, "we must take and vote the estimates, and hold the Administration alone responsible for them. We can know nothing about them." It will not do, under our form of government, thus to make the Legislature the mere register of the edicts of the Executive branch of the Government. It is our business, our duty, to study, to understand, to comprehend the necessities of the country, as set forth in the estimates; to vote for them, if they are right, and to refuse them, if they are wrong. We are men, and we can as well understand them, as the men who send them here. This is the constitutional theory of the appropriating power of this Government. To the Executive belongs the execution of the laws, but to Congress belongs the public purse. If Congress declines to make appropriations necessary to carry on the Government economically, and in good faith, it fails in one of its highest duties; and the Executive, if it has made its statements, and its recommendations, is acquitted of all responsibility. It is well that we who are in a large minority here, with the responsibility of an Executive elsewhere, should have an understanding about this, with the majority, and at the start. Let there be no disguise about these things, then.

I repeat, that the purse of the nation is in the hands of the two Houses of Congress. Not a dollar can be taken from the Treasury by the President, except by the appropriation of the two Houses of Congress; and whatever appropriations are voted by Congress, Congress is responsible for them. Aye, sir, Congress has peculiar advantages over the Administration in voting upon its estimates; for under our peculiar financial system, the fiscal year commences with the 1st of July or the 30th of June, and Congress acts upon estimates often some months after the Executive submits them. For example, the estimates upon which we shall be called to act when the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill comes up for consideration, are for the fiscal year beginning July 1st, 1852, and ending with June 30th, 1853, and were made, in part, by the War Department, in September or October last, and sent to the Executive in November last, being one year and seven, eight, or nine months ahead of their final expenditure, June 30th, 1853. The Executive must have his estimates printed and on our tables the very day we meet in December—estimates upon which we shall not probably act before July or August next. It is the duty of Congress, and it is its peculiar privilege, months after they are submitted, to scan these estimates, and to judge of them by the experience of a later period; but when Congress has adopted them, Congress becomes responsible for them, as well as the Executive. Frankness and fair-dealing demanded of me to say thus much here before we go further into the vote; and what I have said, I hold to be true and legitimate doctrine.

WHAT ARE ESTIMATES?

Now, what are estimates? They are nothing but guesses, at best. They are the judgment of men, founded upon the past history of this Government and upon its past expenditure; of what is to happen hereafter, and what is to be the cost of it. Upon this past history, presuming the future will be as the past has been, they make their estimates of the future expenditure of the Government a year and seven or eight months before all those expenditures are to occur. Now, we stand on vantage ground some months ahead of the Executive in this matter. We know what the expenses of the Government have been since the time the estimates were made, or, at least, we can know if we desire. It is impossible for any Executive, unless he be gifted with extraordinary wisdom or some foresight divine, to know a year and seven months ahead what are to be all the actual expenses of the Government. If an Indian war arises, if trouble happens upon some distant ocean, if frontier difficulties are created, if there be any extraordinary increase of the cost of collecting revenue, or if there be any domestic troubles, it is impossible for the Executive to know what should be the exact estimates for the expenses of the Government a year and seven months ahead, or even for Congress to know, when, at a later period, it is making its appropriations. So that, under our peculiar financial system, which makes our fiscal year commence on the 1st of July and end on the 30th of June afterwards, there must always be deficiencies in some branches of expenditure, and surpluses in others, as there always have been deficiencies and surpluses, most especially since this fiscal year has been substituted for the regular year of the calendar.

DEFICIENCY BILLS NO NOVELTIES.

I have heard gentlemen speak of this deficiency bill, which has appeared in this House, as of something new—unknown in Congress before, and as if belonging peculiarly to this Administration—unknown to any preceding. Mr. Chairman, if this idea has taken possession of the minds of any new member, he must be a new member indeed. From the time when the present financial system was established down to the present, these deficiency bills have appeared on the stage every year, and they will continue to appear hereafter, as long as the Government exists, or the fiscal year exists as it is now. I hold in my hand a tabular statement from the year 1844, exhibiting large deficiencies every year, under the administration of Mr. Polk, and I shall read it in part:

I especially beg the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the deficiencies of 1847 and 1848, as in the last year, a Whig Congress, (Mr. Vinton, chairman of the Ways and Means,) made up for the deficiencies of Mr. Polk to the amount of over $13,300,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York, if that was not during the Mexican war, when we had fifty thousand troops in the field?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes; but Congress in declaring war with Mexico, authorized the raising of the troops, and provided the means of carrying the war on. The gentleman, however, need not be afraid of me, for I intend fairly to face all facts, if he will give me time. If gentlemen will not interrupt me, they will find that I am making a full, free, and fair statement.

Now, it is very true that this was during the time of the Mexican war, and it was very probable that there should be deficiencies, doubtless larger deficiencies than would otherwise have been necessary; but it is also true, that on the 13th of May, 1846, when the President was authorized to call into service the fifty thousand volunteers, he could, in the December following, have included in his estimates for the year ending June, 1848, the cost of maintaining them. It was in the power of the Administration—the country then being involved in war—to know what would be the deficiency a year and a half ahead, as well then as at any other time. It knew, that in order to conquer Mexico, it had to involve the country in a prodigious expenditure, and to bring in the field all the troops Congress authorized in May, 1846, and it was its duty, in submitting the estimates in December, 1846, for the year ending June, 1848, to fully, fairly, and fearlessly estimate what the cost of that job would be, certainly, just as much as it is the duty of this Administration now, a year and seven months ahead, to know what will be all, and the exact expenditures of the Government in the now much larger field of Oregon and California.

ESTIMATES DURING THE MEXICAN WAR.

But now the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] has chosen to introduce this justification of the Mexican war as a defense of erroneous estimates, I propose to follow him there—not to attack, but to demonstrate that the leading minds and leading men of his party are as fallible as other mortals in their guesses or estimates. I did not intend to introduce some facts which I have before me at all, but it now becomes proper to show, if war justifies larger deficiency bills than peace, or larger errors in estimates, the interrogation of the gentleman from Tennessee was proper and apt.

Mr. Polk, in his annual message, and Mr. Walker, in his Treasury report, December, 1846, stated that if the Mexican war continued to July 1st, 1849, a loan of $23,000,000 would be needed to carry the Government forward, and that that would leave a surplus of $4,000,000 in the Treasury. But Mr. Walker, in his report of December, 1847, asked—notwithstanding this surplus of $4,000,000 that was to be in the Treasury—a loan of $18,500,000 additional, to meet the expenses of the Government the same year. The Ways and Means Committee reported his loan bill as asked for—that is, for $18,500,000. This Mr. Walker, the Secretary of the Treasury then, gladdened the country with a letter to Congress, stating that he had made the fortunate discovery of an error, showing the Treasury to have nearly seven millions of dollars more than stated in his annual report. The Committee of Ways and Means then reduced that loan of $18,500,000 to $12,000,000, to carry out that fortunate discovery. But, before the country was gladdened fully with this most satisfactory announcement, as early as January, 1848, the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the House another statement, saying that when the first letter was sent in, he did not know that Mr. Marcy had called upon the Committee of Ways and Means for $4,000,000, to supply a deficiency, which was necessary in his (the War) Department, and therefore, that the sixteen million loan would be necessary. This sum the Committee of Ways and Means reported, and Congress acted accordingly. Now, I do not mean to censure Mr. Walker, or Mr. Polk's administration, for this wild guessing, this blundering by millions, unless it be intended to convey the idea that they had the power of foreseeing all the actual expenditures of the war, exactly what it would cost the country, and that it was their duty, therefore, to make estimates that would not admit of any possible deficiency; but I do mean to say, that no administration, throughout our whole history, has ever exhibited such a want of apprehension of its own means as that did—millions at a time, or such a want of comprehension of the great task it had undertaken, in conquering peace with Mexico. At one time it blundered upon seven millions of hitherto undiscovered treasure, but at another time the cruel Secretary of War had robbed it of four millions of its precious means and receipts. The war, it is clear, or rather the cost of it, had utterly bewildered Mr. Polk, Mr. Walker, Mr. Marcy, and all who, in Washington, had been carrying it on.

Equally erroneous were the estimates of Mr. Polk's administration for the expenditures for the fiscal year ending July 1st, 1848. The Government set them down to be $45,781,784; but in only the first seven months of that fiscal year, the estimates were changed and run up to $62,783,660. The Secretary of War then estimated his expenses, for the fiscal year, at $23,938,000, but in the session of 1847 and 1848, he asked for an additional expenditure of over $14,033,434, an addition of more than the yearly expenses of the Government during John Quincy Adams's administration.

I repeat that I do not intend to censure Mr. Polk, Mr. Walker, or Mr. Marcy, but I do intend to say, that if gentlemen suppose that this Administration can calculate or estimate better than did the last, they require more of us than they did themselves; and they pay us a compliment we ought to thank them for.

The Quartermaster General, Jesup, submitted to Mr. Marcy a statement of his deficiencies, upon the 4th of November, 1847, and there were then arrears in his department, for which he estimated $7,500,000; and for clothing, camp, and garrison equipage, $960,000 more; making in all nearly $8,460,000—a sum necessary for him as a deficiency. He estimated the expenditure for the next fiscal year, for his own, the quartermaster's department, to be over $19,291,200. This deficiency and this estimate was taken to Mr. Polk. He was frightened by the magnitude of them, and it is within the history of the Committee of Ways and Means—not the present committee—that Mr. Polk compelled General Jesup to cut down his arrearsages from $7,500,000 to $5,000,000, and his clothing and camp equipage from $960,000 to $600,000; so that instead of $8,460,000, only $5,600,000 were given; and the estimate of the quartermaster general for the year was cut down to $14,250,000. But on the 3d of February, soon afterwards—for these estimates were sent in December—Mr. Marcy writes to the Committee of Ways and Means that he wants, and must have, $360,000 for the clothing department, which brought back the sum necessary, then, to General Jesup's original estimate, $960,000. Now, I state these great facts in no carping spirit, nor with any love for crimination or recrimination, but to show that deficiencies must exist, as they have existed under an administration peculiarly beloved by the party now dominant in both Houses of Congress, and to ask that party to bear in mind, that they always will exist unless the high officers of the Government are gifted with ubiquity, omnipresence, omniscience, and omnipotence, to control all the elements, and all the circumstances of war and of peace.

DEFICIENCIES IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

But, Mr. Chairman, are our deficiencies alone confined to the executive officers of the Government? I have in my hand now, a letter from the Clerk of this House, directed to the Committee of Ways and Means, in which he asks for $100,000 deficiency for the estimates of the expenditures of this House, $75,000 of which, are in the deficiency bill which you now have under consideration. And if the House itself cannot judge of its own expenditures, does not know its own means, spends more than it has voted, let us not hear one word from this House, or the majority in it, against another branch of the Government, which can spend not a cent but as it is appropriated. I will read the letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 15, 1852.

SIR: At the last session of Congress, the sum of $299,971 was appropriated to meet the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the present fiscal year. Prior to the meeting of Congress, there had been expended the sum of $144,500, and since that time there has been expended the sum of $33,320, leaving an unexpended balance of $32,250 to meet the contingent expenses of the House for the remainder of the fiscal year, ending the 30th day of June next.

It has been reported to this office that the sum of $50,000 will be required to meet the expenses of printing alone; and I would, therefore, respectfully recommend that the sum of $100,000 be provided in the deficiency bill to meet the contingent expenses of the House.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JNO. W. FORNEY.

HON. GEORGE S. HOUSTON,
Chairman Committee of Ways and Means.

MILITARY EXPENDITURES—THE QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to the expenses of the quartermaster's department, for which there are large appropriations in the deficiency bill; but at the threshold, I beg the House to remember, that every cent of deficiency here comes from cutting down the estimates last year $2,315,000, for the pruning-knife was run in there deep the last session of the last Congress! Indeed, there is no deficiency in the quartermaster's department this year, save as it arises from the cutting down of his estimates last year without rhyme or reason, as we see now. It is almost impossible, I will remark here, to comprehend the expenditures of this department, unless we are willing to give them a fair and a full consideration. I must confess, that when the quartermaster general's estimates were submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means at the last Congress, of which committee I was a member, their magnitude struck my attention, and almost affrighted me. I could not comprehend them, and I sympathized, for the time being, with the indignant remarks which I heard from gentlemen upon all sides of the House respecting them. But this state of feeling arose from a want of proper study of the whole subject upon my part. I did not comprehend the growth and grandeur of this country. I did not appreciate the mighty fact, that since 1845, the time from which these expenditures had so much increased, that these United States have been more than doubled in their area and extent; and that whereas, before the Mexican war, we may be said to have had but one United States, one Republic, we have now, as it were, two United States, two Republics, and have added to us a territory twice as large as the old United States of America were in 1845.

I hold in my hand a computation table of the area of the States, Territories, organized and unorganized, in the United States, which shows some interesting and important facts:

	Area in sq. miles.
Twenty-nine old States, (excluding Texas and California).....	1,073,930
NEW TERRITORIES.
California and New Mexico.....	526,078
Texas.....	327,520
Oregon.....	341,463
1,193,961
Northwest Territory, west of the Mississippi, including Minnesota, and bounded south by Iowa and the Platte river, and west by the Rocky Mountains.....	745,584
Indian Territory, west of Missouri and Arkansas, and south of Platte river.....	248,851
Number of square miles in the United States....	3,261,426

Showing these two new States, New Mexico and Oregon, only to have an area in square miles of 119,131 more than the twenty-nine old States of the Republic!

Thus we have, since 1845, more than doubled the area of territory that our army has to defend and protect, and doubled it, too, among savages, dwelling in wildernesses, or on mountains, and in fastnesses almost inaccessible to our troops. Now, under such a state of things, it is to be expected that in nearly all branches of this Government, as the country increases, its expenditures will increase in proportion to its territory—certainly its army expenditures in proportion to its territory, and more too; for that very increase of territory increases its difficulties and duties, and aggravates its outlays. And this, in part, is the great secret of the enormous expenditure in the quartermaster's department. The military posts in the United States in 1845 were only seventy-eight, the westernmost of which was Fort Washita, on the Red river; but in 1852 there are one hundred and eighteen military posts and arsenals. The following is the length of our frontier, in part, the Mexican frontier having to be protected under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo:

Length of Mexican frontier..... 1,700 miles.
Length of Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico..... 3,500 “
Length of Pacific sea-coast..... 1,620 “

One of the most forcible arguments which General Jesup has made to this House, in his report, to show the necessary magnitude of his expenditures, is the colored map, which he has appended to the quartermaster's report, by which he not only shows the overland transportation, his horses, mules, and wagons have to perform, but also that there are now four or six frontiers to the United States, whereas before there were only two or three. There is the frontier of the Pacific, then the Mexican and Oregon frontier, the inner frontier, this side of the Sierra Madre mountains, and the frontier beyond Missouri, full of savages and wild Indians, so that I may say, think, without exaggeration, that as exalted as the Roman Empire was, in its proudest day; far and wide as the Imperial eagle went, and momentous and aggrandizing as were its achievements; equally alike difficulties, savages ten times more ferocious than Gaul or Briton, are now met by the soldiers and officers of this country, in the wide extent of posts which they have, extending from the Aroostook, in Maine, to Fort Wilkin, on Lake Superior, to Puget's Sound, in Oregon, and from the Rio Grande to the source of the Red river, in Arkansas. It is necessary to comprehend this mighty fact of territorial extension, in order to understand this great expenditure of the quartermaster's department. It is necessary to remember that the military posts are nearly doubled; that the territory has more than doubled; and also the other most essential fact, that in 1845 almost all the quartermaster's posts were accessible by steam-boats, the one furthest off (Fort Scott) being within ninety miles from steam-boat navigation, and that, too, in a region where supplies could be obtained in its neighborhood. Fort Washita, in the Chickasaw country, near the Red river, was the only outpost depending upon the interior for its supplies, and it was only eighty-six miles from the depot, where it was supplied.

Pack and wagon have now to go hundreds and hundreds of miles. Supplies in some places have to go over a thousand miles by land. There is not in Oregon, New Mexico, Utah, California, or in the yet unsettled parts of Texas, even an ordinary turnpike road. I have no time, however, to enter fully into these difficulties of the quartermaster general, but they are obvious to the eye in his map, and brought home to all the senses in the details of his report.

The cost of transportation from the depôts on the Gulf of Mexico to the ports in New Mexico, has been tested to be $22 a hundred for the supplies actually delivered in a sound state. No gentleman can have a proper idea of the magnitude of that quartermaster's department, unless he will carefully look over the reports of sub-officers, appended to the quartermaster's report. The prodigious operations of the quartermaster's department may be illustrated at the post of San Antonio, Texas, alone—and from this movement in Texas, the movements from Fort Leavenworth westward, may be guessed at also.

Statement showing the operations of the Quartermaster's Department at San Antonio, Texas, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1851, under the direction of Brevet Major E. B. Babbitt, Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army.
Sent from this post during the year..... 98 ox wagons, Sent from this post during the year..... 752 mule "

Total.....850 wagons, of which 752 were Government mule wagons, and 98 contractors' ox wagons.

With the Government wagons were sent 59 principal teamsters and 750 teamsters.

The Government wagons were employed in transporting company and officers' baggage, subsistence, quartermasters', medical, ordnance, and other stores to the different military posts.

The contractors' wagons were employed in transporting public supplies (chiefly forage) to the different military posts.

By the contractors' wagons were forwarded 69,900 pounds of subsistence stores, 185,000 pounds of quartermasters' stores, and 185 pounds of ordnance stores.

By the Government wagons were forwarded about 170,700 pounds of baggage, 1,260,000 pounds of subsistence stores, 349,557 pounds of quartermasters' stores, 28,000 pounds of medical stores, and 122,650 pounds of ordnance stores.

Total number of pounds transported by wagons from this post, 2,185,992.

For this transportation were employed 946 men, 4,720 mules, 622 oxen, and 73 horses. E. B. BABBITT, Brevet Major and Assistant Quartermaster.

ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, June 30, 1851.

Now, looking at all of these facts, I take pleasure in saying that, though I was affrighted at first by the quartermaster general's estimates, I do believe, and I say it, though that gentleman is opposed to me in politics, that Major General Jesup has discharged a most trying and difficult duty with great fidelity to the Government, with as careful a regard for the public interest as he would have done, or could have done, if he had been transacting, on a scale so large, his own private business, and that it has been the most embarrassing, annoying, and trying duty ever imposed upon a quartermaster, at any time, or in any period, since the extension of the Roman Government through the regions of Gaul and Briton, and over the Bosphorus in the East.

MILITARY POSTS AND INDIANS.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to show the necessity for some of these posts which have been established. I first come to the State of Texas, where no small portion of our little army is stationed, and I propose to show that there is a necessity for the stationing of these forces there. The number of Indians stated to be in Texas, by our official and unofficial reports, much vary. The Camanches in some quarters are stated to be twenty thousand in number. The Lipans are estimated at five hundred. There are Wacoas, Keechies, Caddoes, Andacos, Ionies, Shawanees, and other unnamed tribes. There are fierce and wild tribes, I am told, not even reported by our Indian Department, or not yet discovered by our Indian agents. The Indians in Texas, I am authorized to say, by the honorable member from eastern Texas, [Mr. SCOTT,] who has been much in the Indian country, number, in the lowest estimate, twenty thousand, and they are Indians of a warlike and ferocious character. Our Indian relations with Texas are fearfully embarrassed by the fact that we have no land there "to reserve" for them, and that the Texan surveyors and chain bearers march upon Indian territory, and take it without purchase or treaty. This brings the settlements of Texas into constant collision with the Indian tribes. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo imposes upon us the onerous, dangerous, and trying duty of not only protecting our own settlements from Indian invasion, but of protecting the Mexican frontier also, seventeen hundred miles long; and the expense of that is enormous. Besides this, upon the recommendation of the Governor of Texas, to be found in documents too long for me to read now, posts have been stationed from the Red river, about where it is crossed by the thirty-fourth parallel of latitude, along to El Paso—a distance of six or seven hundred miles—posts in the utter wilderness, and upon the prairie, and posts along the Rio Grande—eight or nine hundred miles more—making a frontier, in Texas alone, to be protected from the Indians, of fourteen or fifteen hundred miles. But, sir, besides—under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo—being pledged to protect the Mexicans from nomadic Indians, there is also imposed upon this Government the yet higher duty of guarding the frontier of Mexico from Texan invasions. The scenes which have been lately transacted upon the Rio Grande—the filibuster scenes—have been a disgrace to this Government—not a disgrace to the Executive branch of this Government but a disgrace to the Government that has not provided the Executive with sufficient means to guard that frontier from American invasion. We have solemnly stipulated, by the highest obligations, under the most solemn sanction, the preservation of the Mexican frontier from American invasion, and yet constantly there have been going there robbers and bandits—for that is the name of those persons, who have been faithless to their country, faithless to the American flag, reckless of treaties, and reckless of national and personal honor—persons better fitted by far to be Mexicans, than to be protected by the stars and stripes of the American flag. It is our duty—it is the duty especially of the northern people, to protect that frontier, and to stand by the treaty at all hazards. If that is not protected, and the American boundary is extended there beyond our present limits, then comes another question of annexation, the annexation of a Sierra Madre republic upon the Southern side—about two or three States; and as an offset then, Canadian annexation upon the northern side, with States six or seven in number. General Persifer Smith, in a document which I have before me, urges the like establishment of posts along the Gila and eastward to the Rio Grande. Six hundred cavalry and four hundred infantry he demanded there, and he said there was being an imperious necessity for them. The like necessity is urged for having posts established in New Mexico. The last news from Texas and New Mexico demonstrates that the frontiers of both Texas and New Mexico are entirely unsafe at this moment for the want of sufficient protection from this Government. The news by the last mail is full of wars, full of the sacrifice of human life, in Texas especially, but in New Mexico as well as in Texas. There are estimated to be thirty thousand Indians in New Mexico, and ten thousand nomadic, wandering Indians upon the borders of Texas and New Mexico. It is stated by Governor Calhoun—I vouch him for authority, though I cannot vouch for the fact—that amongst that wild, unsettled, and nomadic population of Indians—pueblos and half civilized Mexicans, there are only three hundred real American citizens in New Mexico, unconnected with the army, (see dispatch No. 58, to the Hon. Luke Lea.) Hence you see the necessity of armed force for protection. The service of officers and soldiers in New Mexico is worse than any officers or soldiers ever before have been exposed to, for it is constant war without even the shade of glory—constant suffering without any appreciation of it by their country. It can only be compared with the inglorious Indian wars in Florida; but worse than those even, for the soldier now is far from home, without comforts, without necessities even, beyond the reach of civilization or sympathy. Utah, too, is in a dangerous condition. There are Indians there interrupting the lines of emigration to Oregon, endangering the life of every citizen who travels there, and hence the necessity for protection. Mr. Holeman, an Indian agent, writes from Fort Laramie, September 21, 1851:

"On my route to Utah, I passed many trains of emigrants, some for Oregon, some for California, but mostly for Utah. I found many of them in great distress, from depredations and robberies committed by the Indians; some were robbed of all their provisions, and even of the clothing on their back; many had their stock stolen, &c."

"I find much excitement among the Indians, in consequence of the whites settling and taking possession of their country, driving off and killing their game, and in some instances driving off the Indians themselves."

"The great complaint on this score is against the Mormons; they seem not to be satisfied with taking possession of the valley of the Great Salt Lake, but are making arrangements to settle other, and principally the rich valleys and best lands in the Territory. This creates much dissatisfaction among the Indians; excites them to acts of revenge; they attack emigrants, plunder, and commit murder, whenever they find a party weak enough to enable them to do so; thereby making the innocent suffer for injuries done by others."

And here we have the peculiar people of Utah. Who knows what they are doing, or intend to do? Who can tell? Who can say whether they recognize allegiance to this country or some other country? Who can say whether the laws can be enforced there without a regiment or two to execute them? Now, as to Oregon—and I trust the honorable Delegate from Oregon is in his seat, for I am about to use his name as authority—I have a statement before me vouched for by him, as coming from a Mr. Newell, an intelligent old mountaineer, that there are sixty-five tribes of Indians in Oregon, having the most outlandish names—names I never heard of until I looked into the report he made. These tribes have the euphonious names of Spokans, Oukenegans, Clickitats, Shoqualamicks, &c.,—names, I will venture to say, that were never heard of by the great mass of the people of our country. The number of tribes there are sixty-five, thirty tribes north of the Columbia river, and thirty-five tribes south; and the number of Indians which the Delegate from Oregon [General LANE] estimates to be in Oregon are over 30,000. This session of Congress, the honorable Delegate has strenuously demanded of Congress more protection, and he has censured the Government for even removing the rifle regiment to Texas.

There is California, too, upon our hands—California abounding in wealth, and not less abounding in expenditures—the one so well equally balancing the other, that it often requires nice arithmetical calculation to tell whether the country is gaining or losing, for the present, by the accession. The late Governor of California estimated the number of Indians, and called upon the War Department, under that estimate, for protection, to be over one hundred thousand. I have no doubt that the number was exaggerated; but I stand, for the present, upon that estimate. Governor McDougal writes, March 1st, 1851, to the President of the United States:

"The Valley of Los Angeles, of the San Joaquin, of the tributaries of the Sacramento, and the country around the main sources of that river, and the northern coast, contain an Indian force estimated at not less than one hundred thousand warriors, all animated by a spirit of bitter hostility, and whom pacific and forbearing policy encourages into renewed acts of outrage."

"Rendered bold by impunity, and encouraged by success, they are now everywhere rising in arms, and every day brings the report of some new outbreak."

"Protection by our people is regarded as their constitutional right; it is about the only benefit they can derive from their relation to the Federal Government, while their burdens are not light ones."

COST OF FLORIDA WAR.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to stop all party clamor, I have compiled for my use an estimate of the expenses of the Florida war, to be compared, if necessary, with the expense of these numerous Indian wars now on our hands. But, before I make the comparison, I wish to remark, that if any man fancies this country is now in peace with the savage tribes around us, he but indulges in fancy. It is a state of actual war wherever you go, amongst the western savages beyond the settlements. The savage is fighting now not only for life, for existence, but for a home—and for his last home too. He knows, as well as you do, that you have shut him out from the Pacific, and that he can go West no further. He knows, as well as you do, that his march is no longer eastward, but that he is in the heart of your territory now, with the columns of emigration pressing him upon every side. He stands not ready, as heretofore, to face you with formidable numbers in battle array; but, with the tomahawk he cunningly waits for an opportunity to scalp you and your children, who may be emigrating to California or Oregon, or with the arrow to pierce you, or in stealth to creep upon and plunder you. War, war, exists with the savage on every side. There were in Florida, during the Florida war, it is believed, not over 1,100 Indians, with a few negroes. The appropriations for the army and for the suppression of Indian hostilities, &c., including all military operations, were:

In 1836.....$8,111,950
In 1837.....3,308,521
In 1838.....10,007,546

Total.....$27,428,017

Besides these, there were subsequent appropriations for arrears, and for paying the claims of States for services of militia, &c.

The regular force in service in the United States during that period, averaged 7,500; the total militia force was about 36,000, averaging three months service—that is, equal to 9,000 men for the year, or 3,000 for three years; that force added to the army would give about 10,500 men, at an average expense of $9,100,000, or $860 per man. The least possible estimates that can be made of the cost of the Florida war, was $11,000,000 or $13,000,000.

The average force of the army for the three years succeeding the war with Mexico has been ten thousand five hundred, with a few hundred volunteers. The estimates have been under $7,000,000 per annum, and the appropriation still less. The actual expenses probably have not exceeded $8,500,000 per annum, or not $800 per man. Now, I know there was extravagance in the Florida war. I know volunteers were called out when they were not needed. I know fire-wood was brought from the levee of New Orleans to Florida, where fire-wood abounded. I challenge no comparison with such expenditures, justified even by a Democratic Administration and a Democratic Congress; but what I do challenge is a comparison of the geographical position of Florida, in the heart of our settled country almost, accessible by sea and by steam, with comparatively little or no land transportation within the reach of the great markets of New Orleans, and the northern cities—with the geographical position of New Mexico, of Utah, of Texas, the Upper Rio Grande, and on her northern boundary—with the costly, golden prices of Oregon and California, remote from cities and abounding in immigrating colonists, enhancing by their numbers the value of everything enormously. The naval expenses of the Florida war, the cost of revenue cutters in service there—all such charges I throw out of account—for the challenged point of comparison is accessibility by water and steam, and the expenses of land transportation. Now, we have over-land wagon routes across a whole continent, from Fort Leavenworth, in Missouri, to Puget's Sound on the Pacific ocean. The Rifle regiment made the march across a continent, and endured more, and suffered more, and cost more, than if they had been in the campaign in Mexico. Troops, flying squadrons of dragoons, are all the while scouring and overrunning what I may call the innermost part of the country. The service is with them all a service of war; and yet they exhibit no such expenditures as these incurred here at home, in subduing only eleven hundred Indians in Florida.

QUARTERMASTER'S EXPENDITURES.

The expenses of transportation, of forage, and in fact everything in California, are often ten times greater than in other parts of this country; but California is not less a part of the United States, and it is not less our duty to protect her people, in each and every quarter, from the Indians, as much as if these Indians were in Tennessee, New York, or Alabama. I have before me a paper, too long to read, containing all the expenditures of the quartermaster's department for a large number of years. Those expenditures have been larger for a long time, than they have shown upon their face, in the estimates, especially during, and in consequence of, the Mexican war, from a system too complicated for me here to explain, because I have not time to do so. But the actual expenditures of the quartermaster's department, for the year ending 30th June, 1849—the closing year of Mr. Polk's Administration—were $6,090,976. Mr. Polk estimated (peace estimates, June 30, 1848,) $4,430,000. Congress (August 18, 1848) appropriated only $2,940,000. The next year, December, 1848, the estimates made by Mr. Polk were for only $2,000,000; cut down largely by Mr. Polk again, from General Jesup's estimate, as I am prepared to substantiate, and as I fear, because there was an incoming Whig Administration. The estimates, December, 1848, were for $2,000,000, and the expenditures were $5,338,969. Such are the legacies of debt in the quartermaster's department, which have been left us by a preceding Administration. The following table of actual expenditures in the quartermaster's department will explain itself:

1849.....	$6,090,976
" " June 30th, 1850.....	5,338,969
" " June 30th, 1851.....	4,892,927
" " June 30th, 1852, (estimated)...	4,379,000
" " June 30th, 1853, (estimated)...	3,900,000

Congress, last year, cut from the estimate of June 30th, 1852, $2,315,000.

The following table will explain the estimates of last year cut off, and what is new in the bill for deficiencies:

Heads of appropriations.	Amounts cut off by Congress last year.	Amounts estimated this year for deficiency.	In the deficiency bill.
For regular supplies.....	$630,000	$917,460	$795,000
For incidental expenses.....	225,000
For purchase of horses.....	60,000	40,000	40,000
For barracks quarters, &c.....	400,000	219,000	219,000
For trans'n of troops, &c.....	1,000,000	590,000	590,000
	$2,315,000	$2,066,460	$1,944,000

The only complaint I make, Mr. Chairman, against General Jesup is, that he has not had the courage at all times to face the Executive and Congress, and tell them both of all these expenditures—what and how indispensably necessary they were. He should have let the country understand from the start what was the cost of the Mexican war, and the cost of the Mexican acquisitions. And though he has been a soldier, who has faced battle and war, yet in the Executive Chamber I fear that he has not had the courage to face Mr. Polk and his estimates at every hazard.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL.

I know it is said that the quartermaster is not responsible for all his expenditures. I understand that argument, and all the force there is in it. Here is a book containing the regulations of the quartermaster's department. It is the Army Regulations; and it appears from this that he has a complete administrative control of all the officers belonging to his department; that it is his duty "to provide quarters, hospitals, and transportation for all military stores, provisions, camp and garrison equipage;" "good and sufficient store-houses for all military stores;" "to purchase all fuel, forage, straw, and stationery;" "to purchase all horses, oxen, mules, and harness, and all wagons, carts, and boats;" "to purchase dragoon and artillery horses;" "saddles, bridles, and other necessary equipments;" "to provide materials, and direct and superintend the constructing and repairing of quarters, barracks, hospitals, store-houses, stables, and other necessary and authorized buildings for the army, and the security of public property, (Art. 77-927.) I quote the following from the Army Regulations:

933. "It shall be the duty of the quartermaster general to make himself acquainted with the frontiers, both maritime and interior; and with all the principal avenues leading to the contiguous Indian and foreign territories; with the military resources of the country; and the means and facilities of transportation, particularly of the districts on the frontiers; with the most eligible points for concentrating troops and collecting supplies; whether in relation to offensive or defensive operations; with the relative expense of concentrating at particular positions, and the advantages of those positions; and he shall be prepared at all times to give detailed information on those subjects, when required to do so, either by the Secretary of War or the General-in-Chief."

934. "He shall, under the orders, or with the approbation, of the Secretary of War, or the General-in-Chief, designate the routes of communication between the different posts and armies; the course of military roads, and the sites for permanent and temporary depots of provisions and military stores."

938. "He shall prepare all the estimates of the funds and supplies required for the service of his department, and he shall prepare and submit, for the sanction of the Secretary of War, plans for barracks, quarters, and other improvements, and cause the plans, when approved, to be carried into effect, as far as the means provided by Congress shall enable him."

I might go on through the 1078 sections of the quartermaster's duties, to show his responsibilities.

The most important branch of the army is his. Without him nothing of importance can be done, and, indeed, everything depends upon him. I know there will be an attempt to evade for him, and to avoid for him, these responsibilities, because the Administration cannot be struck at without striking him down first; and in striking him down, an army officer, not of our political faith, will be struck at; but there he is; these are his duties, these are his responsibilities; and no petty quibbling, nor artful dodging, can relieve him; and I am sure he himself does not wish to be relieved from any duty the Army Regulations impose upon him.

EXPENSES INCREASED BY CONGRESS 1850.

It must be borne in mind, that Congress has largely increased the army since the peace establishment of 1845. It has created the costly regiment of mounted riflemen. In 1845, January 1st, the organization of the army was 8,634; but January 1st, 1852, it was 12,311. By the act of June 17th, 1850, all companies serving at the several military posts on the Western frontier, and at remote and distant stations, are entitled to 70 privates each, and at other stations the number of privates per company is:

In the dragoons.....	55	Additional, 24
In mounted rifles.....	64	" 10
In artillery.....	42	" 32
In light artillery.....	64	" 10
In infantry.....	42	" 32
At the remote stations referred to in the law, there are now stationed, of Dragoons.....	18	companies.
Mounted rifles.....	10	"
Artillery.....	11	"
Infantry.....	59	"

Total.....98 companies.

MOUNTED FORCE.

Organization in 1852, 2,632	Strength, 1,960
Organization in 1845, 1,298	" 1,108

Increase.....1,334 852

The additional cost of supporting a regiment of cavalry over and above that of a regiment of infantry is as follows:

and is as follows:

On the frontier of Missouri or Iowa,	$139,827
In Texas.....	213,331
In New Mexico.....	343,548

The act of June 17th, 1842, also raised the bounty on enlistments, in lieu of transportation, to sums ranging from $23 to $142.

Examination of such facts as these will show why and how there have been increased the expenses of the army.

THE EXPENSES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

I hasten on from this dry and tedious detail; but I cannot flatter you, however, that I shall present any detailed statement less dry. It has been said that the expenditures of this Government have run up to $50,000,000; and I am asked, I think I hear, "How is it that you Whigs have thus run up the aggregate expenses of the Government, and that now, when you got along, under John Quincy Adams, with only some $12,000,000, you estimate some $42,892,299 to be necessary for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1853?" Indeed, an honorable member from Indiana has already entered into this sort of fiscal criticism, and I am prepared to answer him, and all others with him.

In the first place, I ask his attention to the legacy of debts and the legacy of appropriations bequeathed to us by the Mexican war. War is a costly as well as a bloody luxury, and it is always well to comprehend its cost as well as its glories.

LEGACY OF DEBT.

The Mexican war left upon the country an immediate national debt of about $80,000,000, exclusive of pensions, bounty lands, and the annual additional, but incalculable, cost of governing and keeping what we won from, or bought of, Mexico. The ten million Texas indemnity bill may be added to that, for all that is yet to be paid, with interest for fourteen years. The Mexican war bounty lands absorbed 6,036,960 acres of the public lands, worth, at $1 25 per acre, $7,546,200; and the bounty land bill of September 28th, 1850, some, if not most of which, in some form or other, is for soldiers serving in consequence of the Mexican war, absorbs, it is estimated, 48,000,000 acres more, worth $60,000,000. (See Treasury report, 1850; statement K.) We have just passed another bounty land law, the number of acres to be absorbed by which I have no means of calculating.

The pensions, under act of 1848, paid to 30th June, 1850, were.....$1,198,141

Pensions under act of 1848, estimated for 1851 and 1852..... 1,525,000
(See statements by James E. Heath, Treasury Report, 1850—statement M, No. 1 and M, No. 2.)

The expenses entailed upon the country in consequence of the Mexican war and its acquisitions, can be understood only by a relative comparison of what were the expenditures of this Government before and after the war. Accurate tables have been prepared—the curious in such matters will find them in the Treasury Report of 1850—showing, (see statement I):

The actual and estimated expenditures for the seven years ending 30th June, 1852, to amount to.....$294,807,407

The expenditures for the year ending 30th June, 1845—the year immediately preceding the war—having been $21,389,049, the aggregate expenditures for the seven succeeding years upon that basis, would have amounted to.... 149,680,345

Showing an excess over the peace establishment of 1845 of.....$145,147,062

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report of 1850, estimates, on most excellent data, the expenditures and liabilities chargeable directly to the Mexican war and the acquisitions consequent upon the treaty of peace, to be $217,175,577. The details of this estimate are too long to be quoted, but it can be seen in part in such items as pensions above stated, and—

Installments and interest under twelfth article of treaty with Mexico.....	$16,388,396

DEBENTURES, DRAWBACKS, NO EXPENDITURES.

To understand the comparative expenditures of this Government, it will be necessary to bear in mind the changes that the laws have made in the mode of registering the expenditures from year to year. Prior to June 30, 1849, the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, lands, debenture bonds, refunding duties, &c., were never registered in the annual expenditures, but the cost of collecting the revenue alone for the first time, of late registered as a part of the expenses of Government, is over two millions a year; and these two millions appear now, under this Administration, as a part of the annual expenditures. The same remark may be made of other items, that go to swell up the $48,005,878, which the Register of the Treasury reports as making the annual expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1851. The new system is, and it is a wise system, to record all expenditures, all out-goings, such as the following, and Whigs see it done with pleasure:

Repayment of duties on sugar and molasses, illegally exacted by collectors.....	$439,588
Payment of debentures, drawbacks, bounties, and allowances.....	794,639
Repayment to importers of excess of deposits for unascertained duties.....	896,024
Debentures and other charges (customs).....	72,623
Expenses of collecting revenue from customs prior to 1st January, 1850.....	1,888,471
Payment of public debt and interest.....	4,217,986

These are all items that have not hitherto figured in the annual expenditures of the Government, and these amount in all to $8,309,331. Indeed the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year ending June 30, 1852, were $33,667,489. The estimates for year ending June 30, 1853, are $29,257,533; while the expenditures as appropriated by the last Congress, and the Congresses preceding, were $48,005,878, being over estimates for year ending 1852, $14,338,389.

COST OF MEXICAN ACQUISITIONS.

The Secretary of the Treasury states, in part, of the appropriations required by our new Territories, and in the fulfillment of our obligations consequent upon the acquisition, the following items:

Survey of the boundary line between the United States and New Mexico.....	$120,000 00
Survey of the west coast.....	150,000 00
Dry-dock in California.....	360,000 00
Mileage and per diem of Senators and Representatives from California, Utah, and New Mexico.....	26,462 40

These are all expenditures falling upon the Administration, unknown to preceding ones, and in consequence of our Mexican acquisitions!

Now, nearly all the army of the United States is in Texas, or in our Mexican acquisitions, and much of our navy is employed on the Pacific coast, where the cost of everything is enormous, in consequence of the abundance of gold. Land surveys are to be begun, land titles to be settled, revenue cutters to be kept up, in short, a new and great country there is to be colonized, and provided for, with coast surveys, lights, fortifications, docks, mail-ships, and harbor improvements; and where there exists now little or nothing, everything is to be brought up to an equality with the old States. There is no calculating for future expenditures there. Already we have on our table a bill restoring to California what is called her "civil fund"—a fund expended even before her organization as a State—amounting at present to about half a million in the bill that has come down from the Senate, but as a claim upon us amounting to $1,300,000 in all.

We must not, however, now shrink from the responsibilities war has brought upon us, and that we have assumed. After we have annexed Texas, and stretched out our arms over the Rocky mountains to the Pacific, we cannot turn back from what we have undertaken. All of these lands is now our country, under our Government, and we must protect and provide for them. There is no ambition so mean as that which covets the possessions of others, but grudges the cost of governing them.

THE REVENUE AND TARIFF OF 1846.

The expenses of the administration of the Government now being necessarily so large, I shall be asked, no doubt, "How is it that you Whigs 'who predicted the tariff of 1846 would not yield revenue enough to carry on the Government' then, now find it yields enough not only to maintain the expenses of what you call a double United States, but to leave a surplus of some mil'lions in the Treasury?' It is a fair question, and I will not shirk it, I will meet it face to face. There was a time when it would have appalled me, but only because I was ignorant of the history, the written, and unwritten history of the tariff of 1846. It may well have appalled a Whig to know why it was, when such sound men as George Evans and others predicted in the Senate and in this House, that the tariff of 1846 would not yield enough to carry on the Government, that it should really yield enough, and more too. I propose to solve this apparent contradiction of prophecy and experience; and to the solution I beg the careful attention of the House.

When George Evans and others, in 1846, made these predictions, they were based upon the tariff bill of July 30, 1846; which cut up all importations into schedules, from letter "A" to letter "I," and then affixed to them horizontal, universal *ad valorem*s, from one hundred per cent. down to five per cent., and "duty free." The novelty of such a Procrustean tariff bed attracted their attention. No other nation under the sun, civilized or savage, had ever been thus before, to say the least, so original. Procrustes struck out the idea of a bed, upon which short men were to be stretched out to fit it, and long men to be chopped off to fit it; but a universal ad valorem tariff bed was something altogether new in political economy. So many cents duty on a gallon of brandy or wine, was a duty, a specific duty, everybody could comprehend, but "one hundred per centum ad valorem" ("schedule A") on brandy and other spirits distilled from grain—such schedules, from "A" to "I," confounded them. Brandy, wines, and a thousand other like things, susceptible of accurate specific admeasurement, why, they asked, ad valorem them? It was a premium for bad brandy, and half poisoned wine, everybody saw, for, the cheaper was the nominal cost abroad, the less was the duty at home, unless a wrongful or fraudulent system of invoices was introduced, by which all such things were rated abroad, below what they were worth. What appraisers, they asked, too, can tell what wine is worth, (ad valorem), unless they have been experienced, practiced wine-bibbers from their youth up? Even they, too, might be deceived, for when liquors come over sea, especially high-priced wines, they often come, as it is termed technically, "sick;" that is, muddy and roiled; apparently of an ad valorem not quarter price. Universal geniuses, they said, were wanted under such universal *ad valorem*s for appraisers—the universal genius that can turn from arrack, or kirchenwasser to ginger roots and gelatine, or from bananas to beeswax, with an instant, thorough comprehension of everything. Their great objection, however, and their apprehensions came from the serious radical defects in the principle of an universal ad valorem system, and from the numerous frauds that must constantly be arising, and the constant conflicts the Treasury must always be in with merchants, American and foreign. Their leading objection was, that it based the American tariff upon European *ad valorem*s—that is, made our American tariff in Europe, and that when it thus surrendered American to European interests, there was no fixed system, no proper rule, no real law prescribed for estimating these values even in Europe. It is obvious that an American tariff, which surrenders the whole American system of home valuations to foreign valuations, is a foreign tariff, levied at American ports. If the value of cottons, or woollens, or iron-wrought articles, is fixed in Europe, and upon that value, thus fixed there, a duty is levied and collected in New York, two things are obvious—first, that such a tariff is a foreign levied tariff, even though collected under American law; and, second, that the value, the ad valorem, depends upon foreign estimation, foreign caprice, or, it may be, foreign fraud or perjury. The tariff law of July, 1846, was open to all these objections, and I shall show, on Democratic, anti-tariff authority, too, has been admitted so to be.

The force of these objections struck Mr. Secretary Walker and the Committee of Ways and Means, in 1846, and they did not believe that as the tariff stood then, under the act of July, with the whole ad valorem system then subject to foreign caprice, that they could collect duty enough under it to carry on the Government. I make these remarks, and draw these inferences, because in that very extraordinary place for making tariffs, the civil and diplomatic bill, approved August 10, 1846, there was inserted—may I not say, smuggled; for who then probably foresaw its full effect?—this very significant and pregnant item:

"That in appraising all goods at any port in the United States, heretofore subjected to specific duties, but upon which ad valorem duties are imposed by the act of July 30, 1846, entitled 'An act reducing the duty on imports, and for other purposes,' reference shall be had to values and invoices of similar goods imported during that fiscal year, under such general and uniform regulations for the prevention of fraud or undervaluation as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

I call this item in this civil and diplomatic bill a significant and pregnant item, for it not only refers to, and to some extent revives, the tariff of 1842, (certainly as to values and invoices,) but what is more, it vested in Mr. Walker, then Secretary of the Treasury, the power of prescription of such general and uniform regulations (as to *ad valorem*s) as he might think proper. Mr. Walker instantly availed himself of this plenipotent power; and, in order to levy as high duties as possible on high *ad valorem*s, he not only revived what he could of the tariff of 1842, but he went a great deal further even into what the Supreme Court of the United States subsequently decided to be contrary to law. He meant to balk the prediction of Whig prophets, law or no law; and he did do it in defiance of law.

ILLEGAL TREASURY CIRCULARS.

There are, Mr. Chairman—you as a lawyer know—two kinds of law, written and unwritten, the statute law, such as that of July 30, and August 10, 1846, and the common law, the law of "prescription." The common law of the Treasury Department, is a Treasury code, called Treasury circulars; and as the tariff of 1846 was going into operation, Mr. Walker began to scatter them as thick as the leaves of Vallambrosa. The Treasury code which issues its rescripts in Treasury circulars, has power more plenipotent for the time being than any statute law. The appraisers, who inspect and examine imports, and judge of their values, hold their offices from the Treasury, and whatever the Treasury prescribes, with them is law. Hence, when Mr. Walker had in the civil and diplomatic bill, or thought he had, the power of "prescription" as to the *ad valorem*s; and exercised that power, without restraint, he became the law. This power, I shall show you, was exercised with a high hand from December, 1846, up to January, 1851.

Mr. Walker himself began the first exercise of the power of prescription in a somewhat famous Treasury circular, November 25, 1846. He quotes, as if with exultation, the hitherto hidden item in the civil and diplomatic bill. He dictates, also, the modes and manner of appraisements, thus:

"The principle upon which the appraisement is based is this: That the actual value of articles on shipboard at the last place of shipment to the United States, including all preceding expenses, duties, costs, charges, and transportation, is the foreign value upon which the duty is to be assessed. The cost and charges that are to be embraced in fixing the valuation over and above the value of the article at the place of growth, production, or manufacture, are:

"1st. The transportation, shipment, and terms—shipment, with all the expenses included, from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water carriage, to the vessel in which a shipment is made, to the United States. Included in these estimates is the value of the sack, package, box, crate, hog-head, barrel, bale, cask, can, and covering of all kinds, bottles, jars, vessels, and demijohns.

"2d. Commission, at the usual rate, but in no case less than two and a half per cent., and when there is a distinct brokerage, that to be added.

"3d. Export duties, including such duties at all places from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, to the last place of shipment to the United States.

"4th. Cost of placing cargoes on board ship, including drayage, labor, bill of lading, lighterage, town dues, and shipping charges, dock and wharf dues, and all charges to place the article upon ship-board.

"Discounts are never to be allowed in any case, except on articles where it has been the uniform and established usage heretofore, and never more than the actual discount, positively known to the appraiser.

"The freight from the last place of shipment to the United States is not to be included in the valuation; and insurance is also excluded by law."

Here the Treasury circular assumed that the principle on which the appraisement is based is the actual value on board ship at the place of shipment, including all preceding expenses, duties, costs, charges, and transportation. The difference was essential to the revenue of the United States; you will see whether the duty was levied on the actual value at the place of purchase, or procurement, or at the place of shipment. Silks, or velvets, purchased at Lyons, in France, or watches or jewelry purchased at Geneva, had one value; but when transported for shipment to Havre, subject, it may be, to city duties, or duties international, to costs and charges, also of transportation, that original value was essentially enhanced. Goods purchased of the manufacturer in the interior of Germany, or at forced auction sales, had one invoice—one value at the time of purchase—but at the time and place of shipment, from a great rise in value, or from some other cause, the invoice or ad valorem would be altogether a different one from what it was at the start. Here, then, in one Treasury rescript, Mr. Walker made a tariff of his own, and his appraisers in New York, Boston, and in every custom-house, of course obeyed.

This Treasury rescript was followed by another, July 6, 1847, more imperial by far than its predecessor. This circular starts with stating that the twenty-third and twenty-fourth sections of the tariff act of 1842, are in force, and gives the Treasury construction of them.

"This construction (I quote his circular) of the Department must be binding upon all who perform any duties under these laws, from whatever source their appointment or authority may be derived; and from such decision there can be no appeal, except to the judicial powers. (Merchant appraisers—appraisers selected by the collector—were claiming their right to construe the law for themselves, independent of the circular.) The Department, notwithstanding the broad language and comprehensive authority conferred upon it by Congress, feels bound to adopt the construction of the revenue laws, pronounced in solemn adjudications by the Supreme Court of the United States." (The merchant appraisers were hushed at a blow.)

Mr. Walker goes on to say, treating of the right claimed to estimate the market value of goods at the place or time of purchase:

"The most enormous frauds would be the consequence of such construction. Stimulated, fictitious, and antedated purchases, to suit the period of lowest price, would prevail extensively, to the great injury of the fair trader and of the revenue. In truth, under such system, the whole importing business would soon be thrown into the hands of the dishonest and fraudulent, who would be willing to produce antedated or fictitious foreign sales, and that most useful and meritorious citizen, the honest and fair trader, would be thrown entirely out of the market. It is known at present—at the commencement of this proposed system—that even where the purchasers are not deemed by the parties fraudulent, the person designing to import into the United States goes to some prior purchaser, who has purchased, not for importation into the United States, at some prior date when the goods were much lower in value, and imports the goods in the name of the first purchaser, consenting to give a certain profit or price on the delivery here, and thus deprives the revenue of the difference in value, and obtains a most unjust advantage over the fair trader, who will resort to no such artifices. It is the duty of this Department to declare that such practice is a fraud upon the revenue, and subjects the goods to seizure and confiscation, and the parties committing the fraud to all the penalties prescribed by law; and the utmost vigilance is enjoined upon collectors, appraisers, and all other officers of the customs, in taking all proper measures to detect and punish all who are engaged in such fraudulent practices."

This circular the Secretary followed up by another, August 7, 1848, in which he says:

"Forced sales of goods in the foreign market at reduced prices under extraordinary and peculiar circumstances, cannot be taken as the true market value of such goods. When trade is paralyzed by revolution, and sacrifices of goods take place, sales then made, not being characterized by the ordinary free and healthy state of trade, do not, it is conceived form proper data, for the establishment of an 'actual market value' in contemplation of law."

There is sense and sound reason in all this; but it was, as will be seen in the end, in violation of law. The dangers to the revenue from changing all specific duties into universal *ad valorem*s, brought out yet another circular, December 26, 1848, in which the Secretary says:

"The intent of the 17th section of the act of 30th of August, 1842, in the appointment of merchant appraisers, is evidently to give the merchants an opportunity to appeal from one class of appraisers to another. But it is clear that Congress did not design to relinquish the power in the Government to select the merchant appraisers to whom the case might be referred, nor to give the parties appealing any more voice in the selection of such appraisers than of any other Government officers. To consult the parties concerned, or allow them a voice in the selection of merchant appraisers, would soon result in permitting the importers to control the appraisement of their own goods, and it is presumed is not permitted at any port. Merchant appraisers should be particularly instructed, that when acting in that capacity, they are to be governed by the same rules and regulations as provided by law for the direction of regular appraisers, and are to act upon the principle that the invoice price, or even the price actually paid for the article of merchandise, is by no means a true criterion of the fair market value as prescribed by law. Adopt a contrary principle, and one who is so fortunate as to have a quantity of merchandise given him, would be entitled to receive it free of duty, or at a nominal duty, if purchased at nominal prices, and different rates would often be assessed by appraisers on articles of the same value. The fair market value intended by law, is the general or ruling price of the article in the principal markets of the country from which the same shall have been imported."

The Secretaries of the Treasury who followed Mr. Walker, necessarily followed the principles of construction he had established in his circulars and the precedents, until they were overruled by the courts; and among them all, they piled circular upon circular, Pelion upon Ossa, till an indignant community appealed from the high court of the Treasury to the higher Federal courts of judicature. The principles of collecting duties enacted by these Treasury circulars, and all in violation of law, as subsequently decided, were:

1st. That the value of goods at the time and place of shipment to the United States were to be the ad valorem, on which duties were to be collected at the American custom-houses.

2d. That the Treasury circulars were binding and conclusive upon collectors, and all classes of appraisers—merchant, as well as Government appraisers—and that the Government had power in removing as well as in selecting merchant appraisers.

These Treasury circulars thus established a tariff of their own, known under no act of Congress and as soon as they were tested in the Federal court, the Federal court swept them away at once. The Whigs contended, and contended truly, that the tariff acts of 1846, as they have passed, left the whole revenue of the Government a prey to foreign fraud, or foreign caprice, or foreign invoices, subject to all sort of foreign fluctuation of value. The Whigs contended that under such a tariff, there could be no adequate revenue. The Whigs contended, that to allow foreign manufacturers to fix the market values, of all dutiable (American imported) manufactures, at their own door, by their own workshops, was not only wrongful, and subversive of all true principles of a tariff, or sound political economy, but in utter violation of the Constitution of the United States, which requires that "all duties shall be uniform throughout the United States." The keen eye of Mr. Walker saw all this, and hence in the civil and diplomatic bill (August 10, 1848), he obtained as he thought, new powers for Treasury constructions; and hence his great effort, under the tariff act of 1842, to make his construction and instructions "conclusive and binding." It is impossible to say, even to guess, how much of additional duties he gained to the Government by these illegal circulars,—but it is enough to show, by his own Treasury confessions, that without such circulars, under the tariff of 1846, "enormous frauds simulated, fictitious and antedated purchases" would have prevailed; and, "under such a system, the whole importing business would soon be (have been) thrown into the hands of the dishonest and fraudulent."

NULLIFIED TREASURY CIRCULARS.

These Treasury circulars run on, and were acted upon as law, from December, 1846, till January, 1851, when the Supreme Court of the United States nullified the great body of them, and pronounced them void, and without law. The revenue, nevertheless—the revenue boasted of as so large, but made so large only by lawless circulars—was collected under them for three years and over. Judge Woodbury, sitting in a case in Boston, (Greely vs. Thompson & Johnson,) first overruled these circulars. He decided:

1. That the date of the procurement of a cargo of iron in Newport, Wales, to wit: The 24th of January, 1849, was the time at which the appraisers should have fixed the value of the iron, and not the date of invoice or bill of lading, the 24th of February, (the price had materially advanced during the previous thirty days, and the jury assessed damages against the collector in the sum $6,681 28, as illegally exacted.)

A like case was made in New York. N. L. & G. Griswold sued the collector for excess of duties upon plantain bark, or hemp, and sugar, imported from Manila, the collector exacting duties upon the market value at the time of shipment, and the plaintiffs paying under protest, contending that the law only compelled them to pay duties upon the market value at the time of purchase. The jury, under the instructions of Judge Nelson, gave a verdict for the plaintiff of $3,206 44 (difference,) and the verdict was affirmed, on appeal, by the Supreme Court in Washington.

These two cases, the pioneers of others now pressing, not only nullified the Treasury rescripts, and broke down the Treasury code, but they exposed the revenue to all the fatal consequences that

Mr. Walker had set forth in his circulars, and realized at once the prediction of such men as George Evans and others, that under such a tariff the Government could not be carried on. These decisions were made known immediately to the Treasury Department, to the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and to the Finance Committee of the Senate, and they inspired all with alarm. A double alarm was felt. First, it was asked, what are we to do for revenue? and next, how are we to get rid of paying the enormous sums in illegal duties we have been over four years exacting under these illegal Treasury circulars? An honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Hunter,] the chairman of the Finance Committee, a gentleman I am happy to see, whose views are extending beyond the Blue Ridge and tide-water, immediately brought the whole difficulty and danger before the Senate. He introduced a bill which, March 3d, 1851, became a law, and which really and substantially revolutionized the old tariffs, in reenacting the Treasury circulars, and providing stronger guards and greater securities than ever against under valuations, false invoices, unequal duties, &c. Mr. Hunter, in introducing his bill, said:

"The result will be, that hereafter, unless we legislate in relation to the subject, the foreign value of goods will be computed at the time of the procurement or purchase, or at the place of purchase and time of importation, and not at the time and place of importation, as has been heretofore done, and is now proposed. This would give rise to a great inequality, and open a door, perhaps a very wide door, to fraud. All men experienced in regard to this matter testify alike. All the Secretaries of the Treasury, Mr. Walker, Mr. Moretiti, Mr. Corwin, were of the same opinion in regard to the mode in which the foreign value should be computed. And when we come to look at the effect of substituting the value at the time and place of purchase, for that time and place which this bill proposes, and Mr. Walker's circular required, we find that it throws open a very wide door to fraud, and is calculated to drive the importing business into the hands of foreign merchants, thus discriminating in favor of foreign and against our own importers."

The tariff law of 1846, we thus see, as expounded by the court, left the whole revenue system subject to "great inequality," "to fraud," and was calculated "to drive the importing business into the hands of foreign merchants," "discriminating against our own."

Mr. Hunter continues—and I cite his authority, because his condemnation of the principles upon which the tariff act of 1846 left the revenue to be collected will have greater weight than anything I could say:

"If you adopt the principle laid down by the Supreme Court, the same ship might bring a cargo from the same place and deliver it at the same port. But one part of this cargo having been purchased when the vessel sailed, and the other before, say thirty days, as was done with the iron in the case of Thompson and Forman; and the same article purchased at different times, but delivered at the same moment, would be subject to different rates of duty. This would not only produce a great inequality between man and man, but would often afford an opportunity and temptation for fraud, and make it very difficult for the appraisers to ascertain what was the precise value of these goods at the time designated by law for their estimation. Let us take, by way of illustration, the case of port wine in the warehouses of London. Wine may have been kept there improving, and after having been kept two or three years, the importer, according to its value at the time of purchase when it was new, and thus, although he sold the old article, he would have a great advantage over another importer who bought the article out of the warehouse and paid for it the value at the time of importation.

"Again: If we were to adopt such a principle of valuation as this, the manufacturer would, in very many instances, have the advantage in carrying on the import trade with our own country, and would probably possess himself of the largest share, for such a mode of valuation would discriminate in his favor. The manufacturer who has a great quantity of goods on hand, and can wait, when the market is glutted, until they rise in value, according to this decision, could send them over here and pay duty for them according to their value at the time of procurement, or man of straw, at a date when prices were lower. He would thus have an advantage over the American importer, which would, to a great extent, throw the business of importation into his hands."

TARIFF ACT MARCH, 1851.

It is almost impossible to describe in stronger terms the vicious principles of revenue in the tariff act, which were left to us by the Congress of 1846. They justify every prediction, every announcement of the Whigs of that day; and when enforced by the decisions of the Supreme Court, Congress immediately proceeded to correct them; and without the act of March 3, 1851, a sufficient revenue could not have been collected. The new tariff act of March 3, 1851, provides that—

"The actual market value, or wholesale price, at the period of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country," (of export) shall be the real market value on which the duty shall be levied in the United States custom-house, to which shall be added—

"All costs and charges, except insurance, and including, in every case, a charge for commissions, at the usual rates, as the true value at the port where the same may be entered, upon which the duties shall be assessed."

This new tariff act gave the force of law to the nullified Treasury circulars; nay, went further in subsequent sections, by creating four traveling appraisers to go from port to port, to secure, as far as possible, an uniformity of duties in the ports from Eastport, Maine, to Puget's Sound, in Oregon. This act of 1851, is what the lawyers call a Congressional cogno vit, to all the indictments of George Evans and others, in the Congress of 1846. Under the old Treasury circulars, issued against law, and under this law alone has the tariff of 1846 been able to yield revenue enough to carry on the Government and to meet the public debt. The Treasury circulars, however, have bequeathed to the country hosts of law suits, fifty, it is said, in New York alone, still undecided, such as that of Thompson vs. Collector of Boston, and Griswold vs. Collector of New York, with business incumbering the Federal courts, and running up the already too great expenses of the Federal Judiciary; and with hosts of demands for refunding duties, the amount of which can be seen by glancing at the record and estimates of the Register of the Treasury. I see at one hasty glance now $439,588 in "repayment of duties on sugar and molasses illegally exacted by collectors, refunded under a decree of the courts, acquiesced in by the Treasury Department;" and these, among other such items, now swell up the apparent expenditures of this Government!

But, say gentlemen on the other side, "if the tariff of 1846, or what you now call the tariff of 1851, yields revenue enough, and is high enough, why demand any change in such a tariff? Why complain of it? I have anticipated such a question, and I am prepared to answer it now.

THE VICE OF THE SYSTEM.

The essential, radical, incurable defect of the tariffs of 1846 and 1851 is the universal ad valorem, and the principle of them, that establishes the duty to be levied, upon the ever-fluctuating, ever-uncertain foreign valuation. It is wrong, radically wrong, that foreign nations should, in foreign invoices, make a universal American tariff. And it is a wrong that no stiff, stern legislation, no violent Treasury circulars, no traveling appraisers can ever cure. The tariff of 1851 has followed the foreign invoice down to the place of export, and affixed to it there all costs, and charges, and commissions—so far, well—but levying a duty upon a Manila, a London, or a Marseilles invoice, in a New York custom-house, is, to a great extent, collecting American duties upon a foreign tariff, in Manila, London, or Marseilles. It is impossible to inspire confidence in these foreign invoices. It is impossible to make an American merchant believe that he is doing business on fair and equal terms with the London born, the Manila born, and the Marseilles born merchant. It is impossible to know for a certainty in New York whether or not the invoice is a real bona fide invoice, or if so, whether or not it may not be under, or above, the general, actual, even real value of the goods in the country of the export. It is impossible to find appraisers that know every country, every production, every process of manufacture, every price of everything, everywhere—and hence there is a constant collision between merchant and appraiser, between the Treasury Department, and the business of the country. To make themselves universal geniuses, or to qualify themselves to presume to know everything everywhere, I venture to say, you will find scarcely an appraiser who does not study a foreign price-current more than he studies the tariff statutes of his own land, and I am sure you will find Wilmer's European Times with its numerous prices-current (and not always correct ones) hung up in every appraiser's office from the Commissioner of the customs here in Washington eastward to Eastport, and westward to San Francisco. Wilmer's European Times is thus practically the American revenue law of the land; and the foreigner, who wants to amend the American statute to suit him, will resort to amending the prices-current sent from Liverpool to New York. "Why quit our own, I ask, to stand on foreign ground?" No other nation does so. The British revised tariff of 1846, which has so often been commended to us for imitation, collects only £38,000 ($182,000) per annum in a gross receipt for customs of £22,000,000 ($105,000,000) for articles paying ad valorem duties, being less than one fifth of one per cent. of this immense income from imports! All Europe pursues a similar course.

The errors or frauds that do arise, and must arise, from subjecting all the productions of the earth to universal, horizontal ad valorem cannot be got over or got under, however much the attempt may be made to avoid the facts that have been marshaled in proof of the allegation. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report of December, 1850, exhibits irresistibly-conclusive proof in demonstration of them. He shows that prior to the act of March, 1851, in New York and Boston alone, the appraisers advanced on the invoices, from January, 1849, to October 1, 1850, $4,098 in number, thus:

Whole number of advances in New York...2,359
Whole number of advances in Boston.....1,739

He shows, too, that in an importation of fruit (oranges) shipped by the same house, from St. Michaels to Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, at Philadelphia they passed at the invoice value; at New York the appraisers advanced it 75 per cent.; and at Boston 92 per cent., and no objection or appeal was made by the importers. A like extraordinary pimento case from the island of Jamaica is set forth. Indeed, I might, with a little research, go on and add an indefinite number of like cases—but why prove appraisers are men, and that their judgments must vary—and that thus there must be a very unequal system of duties in the wide-spread ports of this now vast Republic of States?

But what is more ruinous to the commerce and industry of the country than all these various principles of universal ad valorem, is the ever-fluctuating basis of these foreign valuations, upon which our commerce and all our manufacturing industry are obliged to stand. As well stand man and labor, it seems to me, upon the rolling billows of the sea, in some frail bark, without chart or rudder, as stand man and labor upon ever-fluctuating foreign valuations in foreign ports. The sliding corn laws of Great Britain have been, throughout the world, universally condemned as defective in equity and sound principles of political economy; but here is a sliding scale of duties in our country, based upon no home-made laws, but upon foreign invoices, foreign valuations, which, as they go up or down in Europe, go up or down in America. These sliding scales operate never favorably, as the British corn laws did; that is, reducing duties when imports rise in price, but just the reverse; for when exports rise in price in Liverpool or London, duties rise in rates in New York, and the very moment the import should be made as cheap as possible to the consumer, from its rise in price abroad, that very moment it is made dearer to the consumer by additional duties at home. No duties at all are better protection to labor at home than such ever-fluctuating, sliding protection; for then labor hopes for nothing, expects nothing, risks nothing, invests nothing. Iron, for illustration, was, under the sufficiently-protective ad valorem prices of the tariff of July and August, 1846, tempted to hope on, to expect, to risk more rather than to invest less; but as prices went down in England and Wales, these tariff duties of 1846 went down lower and lower here, until there is danger that the leading iron interests of the country will be annihilated, and that for this great necessary of life we become altogether subject to foreign nations—their power, and their caprice. If iron ever rises in price abroad above the high prices of 1846, the consumer will have to pay higher duties under such an ad valorem tariff than he paid under the tariff of 1842; so that when this great necessary of life may be most needed by the consumer here, to be got at the cheapest rate, higher duties at home come in and add themselves to higher prices abroad. Our tariff system now, is one of high duties at home on high prices abroad, and of low duties at home on low prices abroad. The first is ruinous to the consumer; the second ruinous to the home producer.

The tariff of 1846, carried out by the tariff of 1851, yields revenue enough, and, in my opinion, more than enough. The country, under it, is taxed as much as it ought to be, and more too. The indictment I bring against the existing tariff is, that it discriminates against American interests, American industry, American labor, American merchants—seldom or never in their behalf. One count in that indictment is, that it exacts unnecessary duties upon raw materials coming into competition with nothing American, and often an equal or higher rate of duty on the raw material than upon the manufactured article of which it is composed. Another count in that indictment is the fact, that these invariable, universal, horizontal ad valorem tempt to excessive importations beyond our means to pay, or to great fluctuations. When foreign products are low, duties here are low; when higher duties would be better for the country, and when foreign products are high, duties here are high, so that when we least want foreign goods, from their excessive abundance, we have the most of them; and, when we most want them, we have to pay the most for them. The whole system thus becomes vicious from beginning to end—vicious not only to industry and labor at home, but vicious to commerce, vicious to the currency, vicious to exchanges, both foreign and domestic, and constantly involving individuals in alternate speculations and bankruptcies. Under it, we Americans are taxing ourselves to carry on our own Government as the capitalists, and the wages of labor in great manufacturing marts, such as Manchester, Birmingham, and Lyons may dictate. The tariff, as a whole, I repeat, is, in the main, high enough, and the tariff of 1846, as it was passed, under the then existing high ad valorem, was, in most articles, (if duties could have been enforced upon honest ad valorem), well enough; but the vicious principle upon which it is based will never be acquiesced in by an intelligent, industrious people.

REVENUE FROM TEXAS AND THE PACIFIC.

These are some of the reasons why so many of the people of this country demand a revision of the existing tariff, a reduction or abolition of duties upon some articles, and a modification of others. But before I can thoroughly answer the question, why the existing tariff has yielded so much revenue, I must again ask attention to the growth, prosperity, and increase of the country since 1846. Texas, at that time, was not in a condition of sufficient security to yield us any revenue. Indeed, the now chief importing point in it, Point Isabel, was then practically, if not theoretically, under the Mexican Government. The duties collected at Point Isabel,

From July 1st, 1849, to June 30th, 1850, were... $5,509 73
From July 1st, 1850, to June 30th, 1851, were... 4,321 78
From July 1st, 1851, to June 30th, 1852, were... 100,561 80

Total $147,393 31

This is one port in Texas alone, beyond United States jurisdiction in 1846,—but Texas importations are made chiefly in New York or New Orleans; and no table, therefore, can be prepared to show how much of our revenue Texas pays.

The whole Pacific coast has been added to us since 1846, with the people of New Mexico, and others. San Francisco has now become the fourth or fifth importing city in the Union; being equal to, if even behind, New Orleans. I have a table before me which shows the receipts from customs, on account of duties on merchandise, tonnage, light-money, and marine hospital money in California and Oregon, to be in all, from November 12, 1849, to December, 1851, $4,238,434. The details may be interesting:

San Francisco—12th November to 31st December, 1849..... $216,453 82
San Francisco—12th November to 31st December, 1850..... 1,759,646 86
San Francisco—12th November to 31st December, 1851..... 2,146,791 58
$4,113,891 26

Sonoma—10th January to 30th June, 1851.. 12,917 15
San Joaquin—25th July, 1851, to 31st January, 1852..... 231 19
Sacramento—7th May to 31st Dec., 1851..... 1,772 48
San Diego—13th January to 30th September, 1851..... 9,491 28
Monterey—7th March to 30th September, 1851..... 6,829 46
Oregon—3d April, 1849, to 30th September, 1851..... 93,301 76
$4,238,434 58

These are some of the causes which have swollen the importations, and consequently the receipts from customs (June 30th, 1851,) up to $49,017,567. If they have gone beyond the expectations of the Whigs in 1846, it was because the tariff of 1846 had an unlawful substitute found for it in the Treasury circulars of Mr. Walker, and because of the great and unexpected increase of the country geographically. Under all circumstances, as we grow numerically or geographically, we must buy more from abroad, and consume more at home, always provided we can have the means for purchase.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. With the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who does not, I presume, desire to make his closing speech to-day, I will now move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say, that I understood this morning, when the agreement was made, that there should be a speech from the gentleman from Arkansas, and also one from the gentleman from New York; that it was likewise agreed that a member of the Committee of Ways and Means should be allowed a portion of the time to reply to the gentleman from Arkansas, in reference to the Indian estimates, which I shall not have time to investigate in my closing speech. If I was mistaken in that, I shall be glad to be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the House to decide that the debate should be closed in two hours.

Mr. HOUSTON. From conversation with the Speaker, I find that I was mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The two hours have now elapsed, and the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor to close the debate.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I understand that the chairman of the Ways and Means desires to postpone his speech until Monday.

Mr. STANTON. Do I understand that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is unwilling to go on with his speech now?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have been appealed to to postpone my speech by a great many gentlemen, who say they are exhausted, and desire to adjourn till Monday.

Mr. STANTON. We are exhausted every day, but we cannot help ourselves.

Mr. POLK moved that the committee do now rise.

Mr. STANTON demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and MASON appointed.

And the question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 81, noes 66.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. STANTON. What is the report from the committee?

The SPEAKER. That the committee have come to no conclusion on House bill No. 207.

Mr. STANTON. By the Democratic vote of the House, ought to be added to the report, only four Whigs voting with the eighty-one ayes in favor of the rising of the committee.

Mr. POLK. Yes; by the Democratic vote. We will take the responsibility.

On motion by Mr. POLK, the House then adjourned till Monday.

ADMISSION OF LADIES.

The PRESIDENT. The hour of one o'clock having arrived within a minute or two, the Chair will take up the special order.

Mr. BADGER. For the first time, I rise on this floor as the advocate of the fair sex, and I desire to throw myself upon the indulgence of the Senate, to ask their unanimous consent this morning to the suspension of the rule which excludes ladies from this Chamber. The galleries are full; but we know there are hundreds of fair faces and lovely forms who will be excluded, who are extremely desirous to be admitted to hear the remarks of the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SOULE.] I hope there will be no objection this once, to admit them on the floor, and I pledge myself never to renew the motion again, unless another like occasion shall arise. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLEMENS. I could have wished that some older member of the Senate should object, but if no other Senator does so I must object myself.

Objection being made, the rule was not suspended.

NON-INTERVENTION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. CLARKE's resolution on the subject of non-intervention.

Mr. SOULE addressed the Senate at length, and advocated the amendment offered by Mr. CASS. Our report of his speech is withheld for revision, and will appear in the Appendix.

At the conclusion of his speech, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 22, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

Mr. KING, of New York. I believe there is a motion pending to suspend the rules, which was submitted by me on Monday last.

The SPEAKER. On Monday last, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KING] moved to suspend the rules, for the purpose of introducing a bill, and during the pendency of that motion the House adjourned. It is therefore the first business in order, and is a privileged question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This is resolution day, I believe, and if the House will suspend the rule which authorizes motions of suspension on this day, and call the States for resolutions, every gentleman here will probably have an opportunity during the day of offering the bills and resolutions he has ready. If this motion to suspend the rules shall fail, and if I can get the floor, I will move to suspend the one hundred and thirty seventh rule, which authorizes motions to suspend the rules to be made on Monday; and the call of the States can then be commenced where we last left off.

Mr. KING, of New York. I suppose debate is not in order upon my motion, but I desire to make a very brief explanation of the character of the bill which I am endeavoring to report. It is one which proposes to amend the law heretofore passed authorizing the district judges in the district courts to call in a district judge from another district, in case of the sickness or disability of any of the judges, by extending its provisions to cases where the calendar is crowded, and the business of the court requires an additional judge. The bill has passed the Senate unanimously, and the state of the business in the district courts of the city of New York, imperiously requires its early passage by this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS, (interrupting.) With the permission of the gentleman from New York, I desire to offer a resolution which will greatly expedite the business of the House, by enabling gentlemen to make reports from committees.

Mr. KING. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will allow this matter to be disposed of first, and I shall not then object to his resolution. But this is a bill which I have been waiting two months for an opportunity to present.

The question was then taken, and, on a division, there were—ayes 69, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. VENABLE demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. VENABLE and WHITE, of Kentucky, appointed.

And the question being again put, the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 28; no quorum voting.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, moved that there be a call of the House.

Several MEMBERS. "Oh, no!" "Let us have a recount."

Mr. BAYLY. Very well; I will withdraw my motion.

There being no objection, the tellers resumed their places; and, on a recount, there were—ayes 90; noes not counted.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

DISABILITY OF JUDGES.

Mr. KING, of New York, from the Committee on the Judiciary, then reported back Senate bill "Amendatory of the act entitled 'An act to provide for holding the courts of the United States in case of the sickness or other disability of the judges of district courts,'" approved July 29, 1850. with an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"But no such district judge shall have appeals from district courts."

The question being put upon the amendment, it was agreed to; and the bill was then read a third time and passed.

MESSRS. DUNHAM AND FITCH.

Mr. JONSON, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to state to the House that the unpleasant misunderstanding occurring here on the 17th instant, between our brother members, Messrs. DUNHAM and FITCH, was referred and submitted, at the instance of their respective friends, to the Hon. JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, and myself; and further, that having declared what we believed to be the plain duty of each to the other, it is in our power to state, that all difference has been justly and honorably settled.

SUSPENSION OF THE 137TH RULE.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I now move to suspend the 137th rule, which authorizes motions to be made upon Mondays to suspend the rules, in order that the States may be called for resolutions under the 26th rule, commencing, under the practice of the House, where the last call terminated.

Mr. STANLY. If this motion prevails, will it not give us an opportunity to introduce bills also?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The effect of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will be to bring the House directly to the call of States for resolutions, giving rise to no debate, and for bills in the hands of individual members of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether the homestead bill takes its place as the special order to-morrow or on Wednesday, as some gentlemen have suggested?

The SPEAKER. To-morrow; so the Clerk informs the Chair.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then, if this day is consumed in receiving resolutions, the deficiency bill will have no chance at all, unless the gentleman from Tennessee will take some steps to postpone the homestead bill for a day or two longer.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is no earthly chance of its being passed to-day, even if we go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is very true; but the day may be consumed in investigating it.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to know whether, if we were to agree to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, resolutions might not be introduced and passed by a bare majority?

The SPEAKER. If a resolution was introduced, and debate arose upon it, it would go over until next resolution day. If the previous question was called, and the House sustained it, it would of course bring the House to a vote upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. FOWLER. By a majority?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I object to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, and call for the yeas and nays upon it.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. STANLY. I would ask the Chair whether the House can, by a two thirds vote, postpone the homestead bill until some day beyond to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. STANLY. Then I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] to give way and let that motion be made. It will give us two or three days more upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. JONES. I yield for that purpose, but it will require a suspension of the rules.

Mr. STANLY. Then I move that the special order fixed for to-morrow—being the homestead bill—be postponed.

The SPEAKER. Until when?

Mr. STANLY. Until any time the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Johnson] wishes. Say "till Thursday next."

Mr. HAMILTON. No; say, "until the deficiency bill shall be disposed of."

Mr. STANLY. Very well, then, say until the deficiency bill is disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we had better have this matter definitely arranged. And as a great deal is said about the pressure for the passage of the deficiency bill, and about the drafts of the Government being protested, and all that, I am willing that the homestead bill shall be postponed until to-morrow week. It seems to me that after the length of time which has already been devoted to the deficiency bill, a week more will be sufficient to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the postponement of the special order fixed for to-morrow, until to-morrow week?

Mr. SMART. I object.

Mr. STANLY. Then I move to suspend the rules to enable me to submit my motion.

The question being put, the rules were suspended, and the motion of Mr. STANLY was then put and agreed to.

So the homestead bill was postponed until to-morrow week.

The question then recurred upon the motion of Mr. JONES, to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing a motion to suspend for to-day the one hundred and thirty-seventh rule of the House.

A MEMBER. What will be the effect of that motion?

The SPEAKER. It will be to bring the House to a call of the States—beginning with South Carolina—for resolutions, and for bills of which previous notice has been given, but neither of which to give rise to debate.

Mr. TOOMBS. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, the result was—yeas 99, nays 73—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, John Appleton, Averett, Thos. H. Bayly, Beale, Bibbhaas, Bissell, Bocoek, Brazg, A. G. Brown, Busby, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Clugman, Cobb, Culom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Dunham, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Thompson, Venable, Wallace, Welch, Ward, Watkins, Wilcox, Wildrick, Williams, and Woodward—99.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bartlett, Bennett, Bowie, Brenton, Brooks, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Cleveland, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Seymour, Smart, Snow, Stanley, Taylor, Thurston, Townsend, Tuck, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, and Yates—73.

So the rules were not suspended.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call for resolutions from the State of Illinois.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to offer a resolution which, if adopted, will do much to expedite the business of the House. I ask that it may be read for information, and then gentlemen can object to it if they see fit.

It was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the standing and other committees of the House be hereby authorized to hand in their reports, to the Clerk of the House, to be by him entered on the Journal, and placed on the docket, or list of bills, in the order in which they may be presented to him, under the direction of the Speaker, to be acted upon by the House, reserving to the committees, in special cases, authority to make reports to the House. And the clerk shall have all such reports and accompanying papers printed, under direction of the committee which reports them, for the use of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the permission of the House, I will offer a remark or two upon the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is not in order for the gentleman to debate it; if he does it will have to go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I will not debate it. I desire to get it before the House. During this, now nearly four months, session, seven weeks have transpired, in which there has been no general call of the standing committees for reports. Now, I desire to provide that committees may report at any time, by filing them with the Clerk, and under the direction of the Speaker, to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, or the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. This will give committees an opportunity to report. I hope I shall have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the resolution.

Mr. STANLY. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now insist upon my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to—ayes 92, noes 36.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STUART in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is House bill No. 207, being a bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year, ending the 30th of June, 1852, upon which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, it will be impossible for me, within the hour allowed me, to take up every item that is in the bill now under consideration, and give it even a very brief explanation. I will not, therefore, occupy the time of the committee in enumerating all the separate items in the bill. But I shall rely upon being able to do so, with the assistance of the other members of the Committee of Ways and Means, when we go into the five minutes' debate upon the bill, if they shall be assailed.

The main items in this bill, which seem likely to obstruct its speedy passage, are the items to which I now desire to call the attention of the committee, and I have no doubt they will consume all the time I shall have.

It will be well for me, however, first to call the attention of the committee to an item of $279,517 which appears in the bill, and which, without an explanation, might seem to have been regarded by the Committee of Ways and Means as a deficiency, when, in truth, it is not a deficiency. That item amounts to $279,517, and has been reported in this bill by the Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of having Congress pass a law authorizing the subsistence department to use that amount in advance of the passage of the regular army appropriation bill. The committee regarded this course as proper, and intended to enable the department to use that amount in the months of March and April, in the purchase of supplies for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1853, that the department might be enabled to have them in a state of forwardness to meet the demands at the beginning of that fiscal year. Again, that is the best season of the year for making purchases. This was recommended by the department, and the committee concurred in the recommendation. It is no increase of the appropriation, but a mere authority to use that sum in advance of the regular army appropriation. The committee deducted that sum from the estimates for the subsistence department, in the regular army appropriation bill. So it will be seen that this, in truth, is not a deficiency.

In the discussion upon this bill, I desire to state all the facts that bear upon the appropriations asked for the quartermaster's department (which are the main items in controversy) as fairly and distinctly to the House as I can.

In the beginning of this investigation it becomes proper for me to ask, how and why does this deficiency exist in that department of the Government? Now, I may be answered in one of two ways. In the first place, gentlemen may tell me that the deficiency exists because a sufficient amount of money was not given to that branch of the service. Admit, if you please, that the answer is a true one, the question then arises, "who is responsible to the country for the failure to appropriate the money necessary for the service of the country?" In answer to that argument, we have but to refer to the Journals of the last Congress, and there you will find that the proposition to reduce the estimates of the Administration now in power, came from one of its leading and distinguished friends upon this floor. The political party with which I am connected did not propose that reduction, but it was proposed by prominent members of that party who are the particular friends of the Administration; thereby saying to the Democrats of the House and the country, "we can get along with less money than these estimates call for—we don't want that large amount—we can administer the Government with the one half of that sum." Under these circumstances, the Democrats are not responsible for the present deficiencies. The responsibility is on the other side of the House. When the friends of the Administration get up and say, "we want these estimates reduced," is it the duty of the Democrats to say they shall not be reduced, and thereby force upon the party in power more money than they want? Or is it their duty to vote the reduction? If I had been here I should most certainly have voted in accordance with the request of the friends of this Administration in reducing the amount below the estimates. If I had done otherwise, they might have said I was trying to force them into large expenditures. It then becomes apparent that whatever responsibility rests upon Congress for this deficiency, rests not upon the Democrats, but upon the friends of the Administration, and they should be the last to complain that the supplies were insufficient.

But I pass from that, and inquire, in the next place, are there any abuses existing in the expenditure of the public money in the service of the quartermaster's bureau? In answering that question, I shall be compelled to say, that whatever member who has looked into the subject knows, as well as I do, that there have been and are now enormous abuses existing in that department.

The first abuse to which I desire to call the attention of this committee, is that growing out of the improper location of the various posts around our frontier; but, I am glad to say, that in many of these things the present Secretary of War shows a disposition and determination to amend, and to prevent these abuses in future. Some of the posts are located in towns and villages, and other improper places—inconvenient to water, fuel, grazing, and forage of all kinds—and, as a legitimate consequence of such improper location, they have to haul wood, water, hay, grain, and all supplies, a great distance, and at enormous prices.

One of the posts in New Mexico is established in Santa Fé, and is a most extravagant place—a place where all the supplies for the army, where all the forage, and everything that keeps up the army—men and horses—costs considerably more than it would have cost had the post been located nearer to the frontier, and in a place more convenient for supplies of every description.

I mention only this one post; I might mention many others, to which these remarks would apply with equal force. Colonel Swords, who belongs to the quartermaster's department, reports that some half dozen of these expensive and unsuitable posts have been abandoned, and new sites have been selected more convenient to the frontier, as well as to such supplies as the army needs and must have.

Another item of abuse, to which I call the attention of the committee, is in the manner of making contracts for the supplies for the army. Contracts are made by the subsistence department, in pursuance of a law to that effect, and under the direction of the Secretary of War. Those supplies are very often, if not always, contracted to be delivered at points very remote from the place where they are to be used. Supplies intended for the post at San Antonio, on the border of the Texan frontier, are delivered and received at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, thereby increasing the distance, and of course the cost of transportation, to a very large extent. The cost of transportation is one of the heavy items that draws upon, and to a large extent absorbs, the money appropriated to the quartermaster's bureau.

But there is another thing. We find not only that the contracts to deliver these supplies at distant points, not only increase the cost of transporting them to the points of consumption, but that another abuse arises out of it: and that is in the manner of packing up the provisions and supplies preparatory to their being received by the quartermaster's department. In many cases provisions are packed up in cases or barrels weighing one third as much as the provisions or supplies themselves. This is an astonishing fact, yet it is nevertheless true. To sustain this statement, I will read an extract from the report of Colonel Swords to the quartermaster general:

"As a means of reducing the expenses, I would suggest the proper packing of the subsistence stores. Large quantities of bacon and hard bread have been sent out packed in heavy barrels, the weight of the barrel being as forty five to one hundred and eighty-five of the bacon, and as thirty-five to ninety-five of the hard bread. Of the latter article, very little if any should be sent out, flour being much more convenient to pack, and generally prepared by the men. Hard bread might be made in the country when necessary. I would also suggest that the flour and bacon sent from the Missouri frontier be purchased at Fort Leavenworth instead of at St. Louis, the neighborhood of Fort Leavenworth furnishing supplies of as good quality, and at as cheap rates as they can be purchased at St. Louis. This course would save the expense of its transportation up the Missouri, and avoid the risk of its being lost or damaged on the way."

Now, sir, we have not only to pay transportation upon everything we actually use, for that great distance, but we absolutely pay, in the case of hard bread, transportation upon ninety-five pounds of bread and upon thirty-five pounds of wood, which contains it. Now, it seems to me that there is no economy in this, but great abuse; for more than one third of the cost of transportation is paid for transporting that which is of no earthly use when it reaches its destination.

I am inquired of, who is responsible for those abuses? I intend to show, before I take my seat, where that responsibility rests. The quartermaster has no discretion upon that subject. He is bound to receive the supplies where they are deliverable and delivered, under the contract, and it is before us in the report of the quartermaster general, that, in transporting these provisions to the place where they are needed, from fifteen to twenty per cent. of them are spoiled, or so damaged that they are condemned as unfit for use, and have to be sold at a great loss or thrown away entirely. I will read a statement from Brevet Captain A. W. Bowman, to show the amount of subsistence stores condemned at Paso del Norte, Texas, from the 1st day of October, 1849, to July 31st, 1851:

3	barrels and 68 pounds of pork.
58,561	pounds of bacon.
7,988½	pounds of hams.
36	barrels and 172 pounds of flour.
394	pounds of hard bread.
3	bushels and 7 quarters of beans.
517	pounds of rice.
96	pounds of coffee.
183	pounds of sugar.
12	pounds of candles.
4	quarters of salt.
114	gallons of pickles.

Of the bacon received from Captain Coburn:
San Elizario, 2,936 lbs., issued to Capt. Joins, condemned.
Doña Ana, 5,439 lbs., issued to Lieut. Trevitt, condemned.
Copper mine, 4,351 lbs., issued to Lieut. Green, condemned.

I could read other reports and statements equally strong and pointed, but I have not the time, and I merely refer to this as a sample of the manner in which this department of the public service is being carried on.

Then, Mr. Chairman, there is another great abuse that has crept into the service. It is to be found in the high price paid for forage of every description. We have, in some instances, paid fifty dollars a ton for hay. In a country abounding in grass, we have paid thirty, forty, and as high as fifty dollars a ton for hay, as food for horses, and that, too, made out of the grass growing in the woods, which our troops would have as much right to cut and save as any one else. All must admit that there is great wrong in this. But this abuse is not confined to hay alone. You may take grain of every description, and the prices paid for it are enormous. Take, also, the article of fuel, I mean wood, cut from the woods in which the posts ought to be located, if they are not; and what do we find? Some of the posts are so located that the wood has to be hauled thirty or forty miles: Is not that an extraordinary state of things? Let me read an extract from the report of Colonel Swords:

"I proceeded to Albuquerque, the station of one company of dragoons and one company of infantry, for whose accommodation quarters were hired at the rate of $275 per month. (See page No. 4.) The expenses at this post were large, owing to its position. Fuel had to be hauled from twenty-five to thirty miles, and some of the corn from thirty to thirty-five miles. The price of the corn ranging, at the crib, from one dollar sixty cents to two dollars eighty cents per bushel, and the price of fodder from one dollar fifty cents to two dollars per one hundred pounds. In addition to the dragoon horses and mules, there were one hundred and ten mules and seven horses requiring to be fed on the forage purchased at these high rates."

Now, it seems to me that when the commanding officer has the whole country in which to select a site for a post, it would, at least, seem proper that he should locate it near to places where he could get his supplies, of every description, with more convenience, and at a more reasonable rate of cost.

Mr. HALL, (interrupting.) I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. He has read a statement of the amount paid in New Mexico for hauling corn under this Administration. I will ask the gentleman how much it cost the Government per man to furnish the volunteers with forage during the war with Mexico, when those volunteers were stationed in New Mexico? Did it cost the Government a single cent?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not prepared to answer that question distinctly, for I have not the data before me.

Mr. HALL. I will ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, how much it now costs the Government of the United States to supply each horse in the dragoon service in New Mexico? I ask if it does not cost three or four hundred dollars a year?

Mr. HOUSTON. The reported cost of the keep of one mule in Mexico is $320 a year, but in that, the gentleman from Missouri will find by reference to the table, was included many other things besides the mere feed of the mule. With the permission of the gentleman I will refer to the table estimated.

Estimate of cost of the keep of one mule for one year on grain exclusive of other forage.

Eight quarts per day, 365 days, is 901 bushels, at $2.	$181 00
One teamster for six mules, at $25 per month and a ration, is $372—take one sixth part.	62 00
One wagon-master to fifteen wagons, at $60 per month and a ration, is $792, and the keep of his horse $187—$792, is $85 per wagon, or per mule.	10 50
Farrery, medicine, &c.	13 50
Wear, tear, losses by death, disability, expenses extra of herding during disability—ten per cent. on cost, $80.	$ 00
	$275 00

The above was an approximate estimate of the cost of keep of a mule, mentioned in my communication to the quartermaster general, but corn cannot be bought at $2 on the average: it should be $2 50—add to above.

L. C. EASTON,
Captain, Assistant Quartermaster.

Mr. HALL. I only wish to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, if he knows of any good reason why it should cost the Government nothing for forage in the war with Mexico, while it now costs $320 to support a horse in New Mexico in time of peace?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I will notice those points as I progress with my remarks. When the honorable gentleman interrupted me, I was remarking upon the cost at one of the posts selected, and which has since been abandoned. I was remarking upon the great expense of carrying corn and hauling fuel and all such articles—articles which cost the Government large amounts. Some of the posts are located so far from water, that they have to keep a four-horse team, and at one,

I believe, a six-horse team, constantly employed in hauling water for the supply of the troops. Now, sir, it seems to me that this is a great abuse, and an extravagant waste of the public money. I must, however, proceed a little more rapidly, or I shall not be able to conclude my remarks in the time allowed me. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] asks me who is responsible for these abuses, who is responsible for this waste of the public money? My mind, sir, is made up upon that subject. I have an opinion as to this responsibility, and upon whom it rests, and in that opinion I differ materially from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] who addressed the committee on Saturday last, and I differ materially from many gentlemen who expressed an opinion at the last Congress, the debates of which I have recently read. It was stated by some gentlemen at the last sitting of Congress, that General Jesup was responsible. I have come to a very different conclusion. Let us see what is the authority and responsibility of the quartermaster general. What does he do upon which the responsibility can be fixed upon him? He has to furnish the transports for all the supplies that are intended and purchased for the army, and also for the army itself. Can he direct that the supplies which are to be delivered at New York by the contractor, under the terms of this contract, shall be sent to San Antonio or Indianapolis? Most certainly not; nor can he direct the subsistence department to make contracts for articles deliverable at those points. The quartermaster general has no control over the contracts made, or to be made, for the subsistence of the army. No, sir; these contracts are made by another and different officer of the Government. They are made by the subsistence department, under the direction, if necessary, of the Secretary of War, and he is responsible for the contracts, and not the quartermaster general. The quartermaster general is bound to receive the barrels with the proportions, two pounds of hard bread and one pound of wood wherever the terms of the contract require the delivery to be made, and is bound to transfer them, wood and all, at the best price he can. For that, then, he is not responsible. I repeat the question, for what is he responsible? Does he control the location of the posts? He certainly does not. I understood the gentleman from New York as attempting to show, under the regulations of the army, that the quartermaster general did locate those posts.

Mr. BROOKS. No; that is not so.

Mr. HOUSTON. Very well; I will take that back. He is agreed with me upon that subject, that the responsibility of the location of these posts is with the Secretary of War, who is one of the Executive officers of the President of the United States. It is suggested to me that it is the commanding officer who is responsible; but I beg leave to read the regulation, No. 970, which settles that point.

A MEMBER. Read it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The regulation is as follows:

970. "No barracks, quarters, or hospitals, shall be erected at the public expense, but by order of the Secretary of War, and according to plans which he shall have approved; and no officer, whatsoever may be his rank, shall make the slightest alteration in any plan of barracks, quarters, or hospital, so approved, without the order of the Secretary of War, communicated through the quartermaster general. These restrictions do not extend to temporary huts, where troops may be compelled, by the unhealthiness of their positions, to leave their quarters during the summer season, or where, from the circumstances of the service, they may be required to occupy positions on the Indian frontier, in advance of the established posts."

Well, sir, it will be observed that this regulation fixes the entire responsibility upon the Secretary of War. Regulations 971 and 971, by a recent regulation of the Secretary of War, are attempted to be rigidly enforced. I would like to read the regulation just referred to, but I have, unfortunately, mislaid it. It evidences a determination on the part of the present Secretary of War to stop this great source of impropriety and abuse, and if I had not mislaid it, I would feel it due, as an act of justice to him, to read it. So there is clearly no responsibility on the quartermaster general here. But let us press this matter a little further. One of the abuses to which I called the attention of the committee particularly, and to which I will refer briefly, is that of renting quarters and barracks at the various posts at such enormous sums. Why, sir, rents are paid at some of the posts which it seems to me must astonish every person who hears

I have not time to specify others, but they are to be found in the documents accompanying the quartermaster's report. Now, I ask, has the quartermaster any control over these rentings? By reference to regulations 965 and 968, the committee will see that he has no power to refuse these things, when they are demanded by the officer in command. I will read the regulations:

"965. When an officer arrives at a post, if he be entitled to quarters and fuel, he shall make a written requisition for them on the officer of the quartermaster's department stationed there, accompanied by a copy of the order placing him on duty. If he be accompanied by troops, his requisition must embrace his whole command, and designate the number of officers of each class or grade, as well as non-commissioned officers, musicians, artificers, private soldiers, servants, and authorized washerwomen."

"968. When officers and troops are assigned to duty at stations where there are no public buildings which they can occupy, the officers of the quartermaster's department shall hire quarters for them, not exceeding the number of rooms to which the officers are entitled, and the space to which the troops are entitled."

Here is the manner, then, in which the quarters shall be demanded, and the manner in which they shall be provided. Regulation 982, to which my attention has been called, but in reference to which I have a note only, says that an officer is entitled to quarters, and a temporary absence on duty shall not deprive him of them. So that we see, for the item of renting, which appears to me to be enormous, the quartermaster general has no responsibility at all. He is required by the laws and the regulations which control the army; and to which I have just referred, to supply quarters by renting, if there be no public quarters at the post. It has been frequently asked me within the last few days, "Why don't General Jesup make the soldiers cut their own wood?" That seems to me to be a very pertinent and sensible question. It is, however, easily answered, by saying he has no power to make the order, as will be seen by reference to regulation 981, which says:

"981. At all posts in the vicinity of public or Indian lands, which afford fire-wood, the necessary fuel will be provided by fatigue parties detailed from the troops, under the direction of the several commanding officers; but should fuel be provided by the labor of soldiers on extra duty, it shall be taken up, on the returns of the officers of the quartermaster's department of the respective posts, and accounted for, as public property, according to the regulations."

Now, under these circumstances what has General Jesup to do? These regulations say what each of the officers shall be entitled to, and what each man shall have in the way of fuel—so much in summer, and so much in winter, so much in one degree of latitude, and so much in another—all specifically set forth. But if the quartermaster general should think proper to say: "I cannot give you fuel here; here are public lands around you, go and cut your wood," what would be the result? He would be disobeyed, because he has no right to give the order. The commanding officer has a right to give that order, and it should have been given long since. If General Scott should issue his order, or the Secretary of War should issue his order, requiring it, then the commanding officer will have it done. Our troops at those posts, for at least a portion of the time, are doing little or no duty that would prevent them from cutting their own wood, and saving their own hay, yet other persons are hired to do this work, making the wood cost from three to ten dollars a cord. I regard that as an abuse; but the quartermaster general has no power to change it. The Commander-in-Chief can change it, and is in my view remiss in the discharge of his duty for not having done it long since. These remarks as to fuel, apply precisely with the same force to hay. Why is it, I ask, that we are paying $30, and $40, and $50 a ton for hay, when there is the very grass growing all around our posts out of which that hay is made? I will leave others to answer that question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot yield, as my time will not allow me to do so.

Mr. MARSHALL. The question is merely this: Whether it does not appear from the documents reported by the Secretary of War, in New Mexico especially, that the officer in command there has not issued an order requiring the soldiers to cut their own hay, whenever the price at which it can be purchased exceeds $10 per ton?

Mr. HOUSTON. I intended to come to that, and state that I had learned of the existence of such an order. These abuses appear to have occurred in 1851. We have not received the statements in detail since that time; and, as I stated in the outset of my remarks, efforts are being made to correct many of them. I stated that most distinctly, but I believe the honorable member from Kentucky was not then in his seat.

I desire to have the attention of the committee a moment to another point. It is said here by members, and believed very sincerely, that General Jesup ought to change the forage that is furnished to the animals we have there in the service. If the commanding officer makes a requisition upon the quartermaster's department for forage, specifying what that forage shall be—either grain, fodder, or what not—the quartermaster's department is bound by that requisition, and has no discretion to change it. If he calls for grain, the quartermaster has no right to supply the demand with long fodder. The regulations allow to a mule eight quarts of corn for each day, and if the commanding officer requires it, the quartermaster general has no right to say, that but four or six quarts shall be given; and the idea that the quartermaster is responsible for these things is a delusion. It is erroneous in all of its length and breadth. But my friend from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] on Saturday last, argued to show (and I was astonished at it) that Congress was responsible for these expenditures. Now, has it come to this?—has it come to this, I ask, that an Administration, with the power of making an estimate—with the power and duty of making honest and economical expenditures—shall attempt to shirk and evade the responsibility incident to such action? I flatter myself that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] has spoken without authority. I flatter myself that there is power—the Executive branches of the Government are not so cowardly—I will not employ that language—are not so lost to all sense of magnanimity, as to induce them to endeavor to escape the responsibility of their own expenditures. That is a most unheard of proposition—that Congress is responsible. Who makes the estimates? The Executive Department makes them. The President of the United States is responsible for those estimates, and Congress has nothing to do with them until they are received here. We all agree about that. They are made alone upon the responsibility of the Executive. But the gentleman says that Congress, by voting for these estimates, became their indorser, and thereby becomes responsible. Now, let us test that. Let us see whether it is a sound, a correct principle. The estimates are sent to us, and, as I contend, constitute what a lawyer would call a prima facie case for appropriation. I desire distinctly to be understood upon this point. The estimates make a prima facie case for an appropriation. They come to us and are referred to our committee. It is the duty of that committee to investigate and examine carefully into these estimates; to scrutinize, to correct, and to do everything to detect error and impropriety, and to expose and lop off, if thought necessary. The committees then report to Congress, and it becomes alike the duty of all the members to investigate and probe the estimates to the full extent that their facilities will enable them to do; and if, after all this, we cannot give a good reason for reducing or refusing them, we should, in my opinion, make the appropriation estimated for. I state that as a principle that will ordinarily govern my action in such cases. But, then, what sort of responsibility does the gentleman from New York attempt to give Congress? We are called upon daily to repose confidence in the Executive Department of the Government. We are told by him and his friends that we must rely upon them to some extent; that we should not cut down their estimates without a reason; and then, if we agree to "take them upon trust," and give them the appropriation, the same gentlemen turn immediately round and say, Congress, and not the Executive, is responsible for the expenditure, when it does neither expend nor direct the expending of a dollar. This is strange reasoning.

Mr. Chairman, there never has been, and never will be, a Congress of the United States that can make the necessary and proper reforms in the Government, either in the appropriations or anything else, without the cooperation of the Executive Department. We may reduce this and that item, but with rare exceptions, we will not be likely to act understandingly when the departments fail to sympathize with us in the movement; to be successful and do good to the country, we must have a responsive feeling from the other end of the avenue. We may cut off estimates. We have the power to do it, but we never may know whether we cut precisely right, deep enough, not too deep, and whether we are not striking at an estimate we should not touch, unless we have a responsive and hearty cooperation from the Executive branch of the Government. The estimates are made and laid upon our desks, but what do we know about them? What can we know about them? With their estimates they give us their reasons, and we scan them, we investigate them; and do everything with the view of making them correct. If we find that we cannot show that they are improper, we make the appropriation, and we should make it. If we do not make the appropriation, we are told that we are disposed to trammel the Administration. If we do make them, we are told that Congress is, and the Administration is not, responsible for them. Then, I repeat, what I have before said, that the estimates of the department form a prima facie case.

But, Mr. Chairman, what are the estimates? They are mere approximates of the amount that will be necessary to expend under the various heads of appropriation. They are not fixed and certain, and it is not unreasonable that deficiency bills might be supposed necessary. I do not intend to disagree in the main with the gentleman from New York, on that point. You call upon the quartermaster general to make estimates, and how does he meet that call? He gets information from all of his officers on the long extended line of frontier, as his judgment may direct. You must remember that he is estimating not for his own conduct—he is estimating what will be the expenditures of other men. He cannot tell how many troops are to be at San Antonio, how many are to be at New Mexico; nor can he know how long they are to remain at either place, because the Commander-in-Chief has the power to take them from point to point as he pleases. Now were he to know that one hundred men will be stationed in one place for the whole of the year, he might, probably, estimate with a proper degree of accuracy; but when that one hundred men are placed at another point, fifty brought to another point and fifty from there and put here—scatter and move them about, as is done by your commanders, it is entirely beyond the control of the quartermaster general to make accurate estimates. What is an appropriation? Let us ask that question; each one for himself answer it, and see the responsibility that grows out of it. Estimates form a distinct thing of themselves, and create their own responsibilities. An appropriation by the Congress of the United States is the giving to the Executive a permission to expend a given sum of money for a given purpose. We do not tell him that he shall expend the money thus appropriated. We do not tell him that he shall give $100,000 for this and $50,000 for that object. We give him permission to expend those sums upon those objects, if, in his judgment, the money ought to be so expended. An appropriation serves to check or restrain within limits the expenditures, never to increase them; and I take it that all parties will agree with me that the Executive is alone responsible for his expenditures, and not Congress—Congress neither expends the money nor does it require the President to do it—Congress passes a law by which it allows him to do it, if the public good requires it. An honest Executive—and I would like to believe all are honest—a faithful Executive—one who is disposed to do his whole duty to his country, it seems to me, would not like to extravagantly expend the money that he has the permission to expend, but that he would look to the wants of the country, and whenever the country wanted less than the appropriation he would feel it his duty to make the expenditure proportionately less—I mean that he will not go up to the appropriation merely because he has power to do it. Can it be possible that the President of the United States, who has the right to expend $50,000 or $100,000, will say, "It is true I have expended that money, and it is true that it was not necessary, but you are responsible, having given me the power to expend it. I knew it was wrong, but did it because I could?" If he knew that it was wrong, it was a violation of duty and good faith in him in making the expenditure.

Here I wish to say half a dozen words upon the blunders the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] has endeavored to establish upon President Polk's administration as to estimates and deficiencies. Now, I agree with the gentleman, that estimates are approximates, in some sort, as to the amount that will be required under the various heads of expenditures; but then the gentleman did not do Mr. Polk's administration justice when he attempted to establish, before this committee, that that Administration had estimated for large deficiencies which had been estimated for previously. Now, take up all the bills of which he spoke, and examine what they are. The one of the 8th of May, 1846, five days previous to the war with Mexico, was called a deficiency for that year. Our relations with Mexico had, become of that delicate and interesting character that indicated to the Administration that war might soon break out, and consequently large numbers of troops were directed towards the frontier of Texas and Mexico, which made it necessary, therefore, in May, of 1846, for the administration to ask for money to defray the expenses consequent upon that movement; those items of expenditure had not previously been estimated for. It was no deficiency, in point of fact, because the troops had been ordered to the frontier, to defend Texas, after the regular army bill had passed, in which there had been no estimate to cover those expenses. Then there were large deficiencies, the gentleman says, in the bill of 1847. I ask the gentleman to refer to and examine that bill. I ask every member of this committee to refer to it; by doing so they will find, as is the case with all the other bills of that Administration during that war, that the estimates were made not in truth as deficiencies, and for objects previously estimated for, but they were made for troops for which estimates had not been previously made. I am utterly astonished that the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] did not note it, and state it in his comments.

Mr. BROOKS. I was interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] who asked me if there were not fifty thousand volunteers called into service? Those fifty thousand volunteers were called into service, when war was declared in 1846.

Mr. HOUSTON. Not at all. The President of the United States had discretion to call out fifty thousand volunteers, but he did not call them all out at that time.

Mr. BROOKS. But he made his estimates.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is mistaken; he made no estimates for them till he called them out, and he called them out in different numbers and at different times, and the very bill to which the gentleman has referred shows the fact. In the language of the law making an appropriation, what the gentleman calls a deficiency is shown to exist, upon an item which had not previously been estimated for by the Administration. I regret that my friend from New York [Mr. Brooks] thought fit not to state what was in the language of the law, and that the entire deficiencies, as he calls them, were not so in point of fact. These are facts which the law itself shows. I have no further time to appropriate to this branch of the subject. One other remark, however, upon the Administration of Mr. Polk, before I pass from it. The papers report that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] not now in his seat, a few days ago, and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] argued, the other day, to show the same thing—that these deficiencies were to pay for the debts of Mr. Polk's Administration. The gentleman from New York, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] said they were to pay Mr. Polk's debts. Now, I feel justified in saying that this statement is an error from beginning to end. There is no evidence upon record, and I defy the gentleman to produce any, which shows any such fact. There is but one outstanding claim that can be charged upon current appropriations, and that is what is called the civil fund of California. But I happen to have the evidence furnished me by the Secretary of War himself, where he specifies that the balance of the war appropriations, which seemed to be in the Treasury, on the first of July of this year, was $855,279. This, he says, is liable for the settlement of the accounts which accrued during the war with Mexico.

I understand that my time is passing rapidly, and I will publish these things with my speech. I wish to say a word or two to my friends upon this side of the House. We are now called upon by the Administration to give them money. For what purpose? To sustain an army upon the frontiers for the protection of our citizens, and for the purpose of carrying out our treaty with Mexico. It is our duty to sustain and protect that frontier, not only from our treaty obligations to Mexico, but from the highest obligation we owe to our citizens and to our emigrants, who are passing through that country to Oregon and California. We owe them protection, and we must give it to them. This morning, I noticed in the Republican newspaper intelligence of Indian depredations upon our western borders; and if we refuse to give the money asked for, we thereby withdraw our protection entirely; we had better disband the army. My Democratic friends sometimes tell me, that we gave the Administration enough, but they have wasted it. Admit that, if you please, is that a reason why we should not keep up the army, because the Executive of the Government has wasted the money? Is that a reason why we should refuse to supply our troops, and protect our frontier settlement? Certainly not. Admitting that the President of the United States has squandered this money, it will not do for us to say, because they have wasted it, the army shall be disbanded—starved, or unclad. I hope such a course will not be pursued. I hope this bill will pass, and we will go before the country and show who is responsible. Gentlemen say that they will take the responsibility of disbanding the army. If we believe that the Administration has been extravagant, wasteful with the public money, I think that is not the proper course; we must keep up the army for protection to our frontiers, and guard our appropriations in future, if deemed advisable; go to the people upon their extravagance, produce the evidence, establish the fact, and the people will eject them from place.

If you turn your army loose, and refuse to protect the frontier, you will create a burst of feeling and indignation among the settlers of that part of the country, and through all parts of the country, that will overwhelm us, if we stop here and refuse to sustain the army, we may talk about extravagance, but the people will not hear us, when their wives and children are being butchered by the savages. We must vote these supplies, and put the responsibility where it properly belongs, which is on the Administration. From the course of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] I am almost led to believe that he is striving to defeat this bill. He has done it more harm than its worst enemies.

I was tempted to believe that the gentleman took this ground, hoping to make the Democrats defeat the bill, that they might smother up and merge the charge of extravagance against this Administration, by taking advantage of the burst of indignation which would come up from all quarters of the country upon the defeat of this bill; and in such an event we will have to defend ourselves against a charge of withdrawing our support and protection from our frontier settlers.

[Here he hammered fell.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I had a proposition to make to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] and if the committee will indulge me, I will do it in a half dozen words. He agreed to show that the cost of the Florida war was as great as the cost of the army now, per man. We paid very dearly for that war. The Democratic party were then in power. The Whigs charged us with extravagance, and beat us most outrageously—most shamefully. We only got some seven States. I submit a sum for him to work out. If, during a time of war, the cost of our soldiers was so great that the people of the United States beat us most wretchedly in the presidential election, what does he expect to become of his Whig Administration when he admits that in a time of profound peace, the expense of our soldiers is about the same thing? I think if the gentleman works out that sum, he will find where he and his friends will be next fall. He will find that we will serve him as he served us—beat him badly.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has been concluded, and the bill will now be read by clauses.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that the committee rise. I imagine that the gentleman does not wish to go on with this bill now. There is other business of importance to be transacted in the House, to which the remainder of the day can be appropriated if the committee now rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that we had better go on with this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. As this is the only day upon which the rules can be suspended, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. Allow me to ask the gentleman if he can indicate anything which might influence the opinion of the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state this: The House will recollect that some six weeks ago—I have never been able to get it in, although I have sought the benefit of every Monday—a recommendation was made to provide for the expenses of the Owahia delegation of Indians. I have a bill which I wish to introduce to the House, and I have no doubt it will pass the very moment it can be offered, for the payment of the expenses of that delegation. It was prevented from coming in before, on account of the papers being sent to the printing office. This matter ought to be disposed of as soon as possible; and if it is not introduced to-day, it never can except on Monday.

The question was then taken, and the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be read by clauses, and amendments can be made as they are read.

The following clause of the bill was then read:

"For the regular supplies of the quartermaster's department, consisting of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the quartermaster's department, at the several military posts and stations, and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the first and second regiments of dragoons; the companies of light artillery, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, and also for the authorized number of officers' horses when serving in the field and at the outposts, seven hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars."

Mr. OLDS. I propose to strike out this clause of the bill. I do not make this motion with the expectation that this clause will be stricken out. From the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, I take it as a foregone conclusion, that this bill is to pass this House, but it will not be with my vote or my assent. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] as well as a distinguished Senator in the other end of this Capitol, have indicated that Congress, and not the Administration, is to be held responsible for all expenditures of the public money. I consider the passage of this bill, with the deficiency of the War Department in it, as a contest between the Executive and the Legislative branches of this Government, for the control of the purse of the country, and nothing else. Why, the last Congress of the United States undertook to cut down the appropriations for the War Department; done, too, upon motions made by the friends of the Administration, and they did cut down the appropriation asked for by the War Department more than $1,500,000; and what is the result? Why, the Secretary of War, in defiance of the manifest determination of Congress, the law-making power of the people, not only expended that $1,500,000 refused him by the last Congress, but $2,250,000 more than the sum allowed him; and he comes forward now to ask of this Congress to give him this $2,500,000, and $1,000,000 more, under the pretext of deficiency, the gentleman from New York, at the same time, telling us that the responsibility is not with the President, but with Congress. How can he ask me, or any member upon this side of the House, with this declaration upon the record before us, to vote for a bill of this kind? Sir, the truth is, this is a direct conflict between the Executive and the legislative power of the country. The President has the sword, but the Constitution gives us the power to control the sword, by holding the purse. If, sir, we allow him, without appropriations by law, to create the necessity for appropriations; nay, more, sir, in the very face of the denial of Congress to make the appropriation, and then give him the money, under the specious plea of deficiency, are we not yielding him the purse, as well as the sword? It is cowardly in the Administration to attempt to throw the responsibility of this waste of the public money upon Congress. Are not all your estimates made by your governmental officers? And are not all the offices of Government filled by Whigs throughout the country? I make the declaration here, that it is the Whig party who are responsible for these estimates. They fill all the offices of the country. I ask you to look over the whole United States, and then point to Democrats in office under the General Government. Sir, you may go to the poorest post offices, where the revenues of the offices do not exceed five dollars in amount, and if the Executive could find Whigs there whom he could trust with the money, he has turned the Democrats out and the Whigs in. That is enough to satisfy me, and enough to satisfy the people, that the offices of Government are filled by the Whig party, notwithstanding all their cries that they had no friends to reward, or any enemies to punish. And all the estimates upon which Congress is called upon to act, are given by the Whigs of the country. All the estimates for the Departments come from Whig authority before this Congress, and we are now told, in the other end of this Capitol, and upon this floor, in the very face of all these facts, that Congress is to be responsible for these appropriations; that Congress, and not the Executive of the country, is responsible for these enormous expenditures. And yet they ask us, they ask me, and you, to vote for appropriations of this kind; and the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tells us that we must do it, or the cry will be raised against us, that we have suffered these depredations to be committed upon our frontiers. When you make an issue between the Executive and Legislative branch of this Government, for the control of the purse of the country, I care not what the consequences may be, I will take my stand for the Legislative department to control the purse of the country, and not that it shall be placed with the sword in the hands of the Executive. The President, sir, may hold the sword, but we hold the moving power, by holding the purse. Shall we, then, surrender virtually our control of the purse by allowing the Executive to expend these untold millions of money with the law of Congress, cutting down his estimates, staring him in the face? I ask, sir, has not this enormous expenditure been made by the Executive in defiance of a positive prohibition of Congress? Mr. Chairman, the principle involved in this appropriation, the contest between the Executive and the Legislative branch of Government, with me outweighs all other considerations. This, alone, will cause me to record my vote in the opposition. But when, in addition to this, the friends of the Administration attempt to skulk the responsibility, by throwing the blame upon Congress, all their howlings about Indian depredations will be unavailing to change my fixed determination.

Mr. Chairman, let the friends of the Administration come up like men—take the responsibility as the Democratic party have always done when in power, and not cowardly skulk behind Congress, and then they shall have my respect, although upon principle, I shall be compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I ask if Congress is a mere bed of justice to register the Executive edicts, as the gentleman seems to consider, it is the duty of Congress to do? Why, this is the old French doctrine—the old monarchical doctrine transported to some portions of the Democratic party, but repudiated by all the sensible portion of it. Congress a bed of justice to register the Executive edicts! Congress has its own will—its own mind—its own power to judge of estimates, and it is its duty to do it. It is its duty to look into every item, and to take the responsibility of every item. It is bound to know what these estimates are, and to scan them. No man can go home to his constituents and say, "I voted and do not know what I voted for." He is bound to know it. He is paid $8 00 per diem to know and study out all these estimates. It is his duty to do it. Why, sir, the appropriations for the quartermaster's department last year were cut down, not $1,500,000, as the gentleman from Ohio says, but $2,300,000. There is no demand now for deficiencies for this year, but a demand to supply what Congress did not supply in the appropriations last year—not $2,300,000 even, but less than $2,000,000. There would have been no deficiency really existing in the quartermaster's department, if Congress had done last year what it has done heretofore—appropriated the sum asked for by the quartermaster's department. So much in reply to that portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio. The Executive power cannot take from the Treasury, as the gentleman from Ohio seems to insinuate, one farthing of money that Congress does not appropriate. The Executive power has spent nothing but what was appropriated by Congress. If the Executive had taken a single cent from the Treasury, unappropriated by Congress, I would vote to bring the President here and have him impeached before the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman from New York say that no part of this deficiency is now expended?

Mr. BROOKS. I say that the Executive power cannot take a farthing of money from the Treasury, but what is appropriated by Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is true. But the Executive can go in debt, and he has gone in debt.

Mr. BROOKS. I have to say, in reply to that remark of the gentleman from Alabama, that there are at times surpluses in the Treasury which, under previous acts of Congress, the Executive has the power to use temporarily. There are surpluses as well as deficiencies, and there are surpluses under the existing Administration, as well as slight deficiencies, and of those surpluses the Executive must have availed himself.

Mr. HOUSTON, (in his seat.) The Secretary says he has not availed himself of them.

Mr. BROOKS. Now, as to the further remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, upon the army. The army does not belong to the Whig party, nor does it belong to the Democratic party. The army belongs to the country, and to the whole country, and the Democratic party has as much interest in it as the Whig party. The officers of the army are not Whig office-holders, or Democratic office-holders, but office-holders belonging to the whole country, responsible to the Executive in most respects, but not removable by the Executive, except for high malfeasance.

The gentleman from Ohio also remarks that he cares not for responsibility. The old cry here was, "perish credit—perish commerce. I care not for responsibility. Let the heavens fall, I care not for responsibility." Let that remark of the gentleman from Ohio go out to the country, when the people of Texas are pleading upon the frontier for want of protection, and when the Americans in New Mexico are suffering for want of protection from the army. Let our bleeding frontiersmen on their way to Oregon and New Mexico—let the settlers, and wood-cutters, and buffalo-hunters on the Western prairies, hear the remark of the gentleman from Ohio. "I care not for responsibility."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it in order to amend that amendment by striking out?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to perfect the clause proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then I move to increase the appropriation contained in that clause, $5.

My object in moving that amendment is, of course, to make a few remarks upon that section of the bill. And first, in reference to the remark made by the gentleman from New York, as to this Congress being the mere register of the decrees of the Executive Department of the Government. It seems to me that that remark, and the idea intended to be conveyed by it, is in keeping with the speech made by the gentleman on Saturday. Sir, that gentleman knows very well—as does every other member on this floor—that it must of necessity be the duty of the Executive Departments to have control over the expenditure of this money; they must, therefore, be responsible for that expenditure; and they must lay before Congress the amounts of money which, from their experience in the expenditure for the previous year, they deem necessary to carry on those particular departments of the Government.

Now, I submit to the gentleman from New York, to every member here, and to the country, whether we should be doing our duty here as members of Congress, in casting aside these estimates, and taking upon ourselves the entire responsibility of saying what amounts of money should be appropriated or should not be appropriated? I ask if the true position to be taken here, is not that these estimates, coming from the departments who have charge of these expenditures, should be taken as prima facie evidence that these expenditures are necessary, and whether it becomes us as legislators—either as members of the committee, or of this House—that we should reduce those expenditures without there is some sufficient reason for the reduction? So far as we are able to find such reasons, Congress is responsible, if they do not inquire into them and make the reduction in accordance therewith.

But, sir, it seems to me that it is anything but a high and honorable course—I mean it in no invidious sense—for the gentleman to say here that Congress is responsible when they cannot get behind, to see the amount that has been expended during the first half year, and scarcely know how it has been expended. Take for instance, the army in New Mexico. I ask, what member of Congress, from his own experience, knows anything of the quantity of money that has been expended, or that may hereafter be expended, in that service? We have no means of acquiring information but through the legitimate channels of the Government, and those channels of information are in the hands of an Administration friendly to gentlemen on the other side of the House. I ask, then, are they not responsible for these estimates? I ask if we can, with any propriety, cut down these expenditures unless we sift them to find out where the abuses are, and then lop off those abuses? So much for that point.

In respect to this matter of appropriation for forage, we did reduce it last year, and it was the duty of the Administration to have gone to work and immediately reduced the expenditures. They undoubtedly have not done this. But the question I wish to put to the committee is this: The money which was appropriated having been expended, and the army being left destitute, shall we leave it destitute, or shall we come forward and make the appropriation that was absolutely necessary to give food to that army for the next fiscal year, and hold the persons who have squandered the money responsible before the country? The responsibility is not as to the appropriation of money to be expended in future, but the responsibility which we will hold the Administration to before the country is, for the manner in which they have expended the appropriation made at the last session of Congress, and which they have squandered. We feel the necessity of making this appropriation for the army, that the direful calamities of which you speak may not take place; but we do not intend to allow you, under cover of the sympathy you may express about the exposed condition of our frontier, to shirk the responsibility of the manner in which the money appropriated last year has been expended.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] said that the Administration had expended $700,000 more than had been appropriated by the last Congress. Well, I should very much like the gentleman to produce his proof of it. This money is not called for in order to pay bills which have heretofore been incurred. It is called for to pay the expenses of our army between now and the 30th of June.

Mr. HOUSTON. Between the time the call was made and June next.

Mr. EVANS. That was about the 20th of February. The Secretary of War sent in the estimates about the end of December, and told you the funds on hand would not last until the 1st of July. The money called for in this bill has not been spent by the Administration without the sanction of law. The gentleman from Ohio says that $700,000 have been expended by the Executive Government contrary to the act of Congress. He is entirely mistaken in that. The money is wanted in order to bear the expenses of the army between now and next June.

Now, I will allude to another point. It has been demonstrated, I presume, on the other side of the House, that this is a very extravagant Administration, and that it has been guilty of gross abuses. Gentlemen on the other side have discovered that, I presume, or they would not talk so much about it. Now, if I believed that, I would not vote a dollar of this money. If you have discovered abuses; if you know that the Administration has been recklessly extravagant—squandering the public money, it is your duty to refuse to vote this money, and I will join you in it. But you cannot prove it. I wish I had an hour to speak on this bill. I am prepared to vindicate and sustain all the expenditures of the Administration.

Sir, the gentlemen on the other side of the House and we upon this side, in talking about this great expenditure, remind me very much of the gentleman in India, who won an elephant at a raffle. He was not rich enough to feed it, nobody would have it, so that he could not give it away; he was too humane to kill it, and the authorities would not allow him to turn it loose. Now, you won your elephant when you acquired these territories. The expense of your quartermaster's department has been less this year, than it has been in any year since the war, and this has been owing to the reductions which were being made by the Secretary of War long before your famous policy of last year, which is supposed to have led to them. It is because a system has been introduced by the War Department, which is gradually leading to the result of decreasing the expenditures, and those expenses are decreasing. Why, the expenses for the quartermaster's department in 1849, were six millions of dollars, though you did not appropriate half that amount, and you expended $800,000 of the civil fund of California, which they are now endeavoring to get back from you.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. If we go into this mode of debate, and travel away from the proposed amendments, there is no telling when this bill will be got through with. I propose, therefore, at the very beginning, to make a point of order, and let the committee settle it as they may please, and I will abide by their decision through the balance of the discussion. I make the point of order, that the rule requires a member to confine himself to the discussion of the amendment which he proposes or opposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Alabama to raise a question of order upon the rule which requires each member to confine himself strictly to the discussion of the amendment which he offers or opposes. In adhering to the rule, the Chair would hold that the gentleman from Maryland was not in order.

Mr. EVANS. Very well, sir. But I only wish I had an hour to speak on this bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish you had. I wish we all had an hour. But my object is to get along with the bill.

The question was then put upon Mr. DUNHAM's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment to strike out the whole section.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to make a single remark upon this bill.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to increase the amount proposed to be appropriated $15.

Mr. Chairman, I intend to confine myself strictly to this item, but, at the same time, I shall call the attention of the committee to the responsibility for the expenditure by this Administration—

Mr. STANLY. Is that in order?

Mr. DUNHAM. I should like to know how the gentleman can tell how I am going to apply my argument before he hears it?

Mr. STANLY. Why, it is enough to tell the gentleman that he proposes to talk about the responsibility of the Administration upon an amendment to increase the amount $15. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will feel himself called upon to confine the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM] to an argument on the propriety of increasing the amount $15. But what that argument will be it is impossible for the Chair to anticipate.

Mr. DUNHAM. In order to show the necessity for increasing that amount, it will be necessary that I should, notwithstanding, show in what manner this forage is to be provided for the troops there, and how the responsibility lies in the House, and then I intend to wind up by showing that it is absolutely necessary, in order to keep our animals from starving to death upon the frontier, to make the provision which is made in this bill. I trust I am in order now.

The quartermaster has no control whatever over the kind of forage to be furnished, or the quantity for your animals upon the frontier. They are all provided for by the regulations of the War Department, which, I believe, the gentleman from

New York [Mr. Brooks] had the other day in his hands while he was addressing the House. These regulations leave no discretion with the quartermaster to reduce the number of men or animals in the service upon the frontier or elsewhere, or to reduce the provisions to be furnished. That is in the hands of the commanding officer, and that commanding officer is responsible directly to the Commander-in-Chief, and consequently under the control of the Secretary of War and the President of the United States. Now, then, what I want to get at is this: The responsibility of furnishing corn, no matter whether it be at $2, $3, or $4 per bushel, rests, not with the quartermaster, but with the commanding officer.

Mr. TUCK. I rise to a point of order. I wish to make the experiment for the purpose of seeing whether this rule is to be avoided whenever gentlemen chose to do it. I make the point of order that the gentleman who was just now addressing the Chair, [Mr. DUNHAM] was not speaking to the amendment proposed by him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the remarks the gentleman was indulging in at the time the point of order was raised, were not in order. It was not in order for him to debate the question of responsibility in disbursing the money. The necessity of increasing the amount of appropriation is the only question involved in the amendment, and the gentleman must confine himself to that question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the gentleman have leave to proceed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not ask it unless I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed in order, unless objected to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will try to make my remarks in order, if I can. I judge of the necessity for the increase for the year following, from the manner in which this forage has been furnished during the last year; and we find there that this forage has been actually furnished, and in the manner of which I have spoken, under the direction of the commander in the field. If it is to go on for the next year, this bill does not provide a sufficient amount of money to carry on that system.

Mr. TUCK. I will renew my point of order for the purpose of testing this experiment thoroughly, as to whether this committee is to be imposed on by such reasons as are being given by the gentleman for holding himself to be in order. It is perfectly apparent to every gentleman upon the floor that he is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman may assign such reasons as he may consider proper to show that this increase is necessary; and as the Chair stated before, an argument upon a mere question of responsibility is not relevant to the amendment, and, therefore, not in order. But the gentleman may assign a reason as to the mode of disposing of this money, and he may assign that as a reason why the expenditure should be increased. The gentleman seems to be engaged in that, and it is not for the Chair to decide whether his reasons are sound or not.

Mr. TUCK. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether it is sufficient for a member to say that this, that, and the other thing are reasons in favor of an amendment—whether the Chair is not to decide, and the committee are not to decide—whether those reasons are applicable and germane to the question under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the abstract proposition stated by the gentleman to be out of order. But each particular case must depend, on the immediate occurrence, upon its own merits. The gentleman from New Hampshire calls the gentleman from Indiana to order. The Chair thinks that the gentleman was not out of order.

Mr. TUCK. I feel no particular interest in confining this debate, but for the purpose of having the principle settled, I will take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from Indiana, being a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, if there is any doubt about the legitimacy of the debate, will not press the matter.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will not press the matter. I wish, however, to make a single remark, and I will take my seat. I wish simply to say—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. TUCK. As the gentleman has yielded the floor, I will not insist upon my appeal.

Mr. DUNHAM. I have not yielded the floor. I will, however, if the gentleman will allow me to make a single remark.

Mr. TUCK. I do not, then, withdraw my appeal.

The question "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" was put, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will not press upon the attention of the committee but a single remark. I wish merely to state, that by the rules to which I have referred, the quartermaster cannot change or reduce the quantity of forage. That falls entirely under the direction of the Secretary of War. That is all I have to say.

Mr. STANLY. I could hang a five minutes' speech upon that amendment in reply to some remarks which have been made upon the other side of the House with a good deal of satisfaction; but as the chairman seems disposed to enforce the rules upon both sides of the House alike, I will waive my right. I desire to get to business.

The question was then taken on Mr. DUNHAM's amendment to increase the amount $15, and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the motion of Mr. OLDS, to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. ORR demanded tellers, but they were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was not agreed to—ayes 12, noes not counted.

The next paragraph was then reported, as follows:

"For transportation of the army, including the baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp, and garrison equipage, and horse equipment, from the depôts at Philadelphia, St. Louis, and New Orleans, to the several posts and army depôts; of subsistence from the places of purchase, from the places of delivery under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require it to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small-arms, from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts and army depôts; freights, tolls, and ferrage; for the purchase and hire of horses, mules, oxen, wagons, carts, drays, ships, and other sea-going vessels and boats, for the transportation of supplies, and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters, transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; and for procuring water at such posts as, from their situation, require that it be brought from a distance, eight hundred and ninety thousand dollars."

Mr. OLDS. I propose also to strike out this clause, and I desire to say one word in reference to my motion.

If there be any principle involved in voting for or against this bill, I wish to act consistently in the vote I shall give upon it. Believing, as I do, as I said before, that this is really a contest between the long arm of the Executive and the Congress of the United States for the control of the money of the United States, I feel myself bound to vote against all appropriations of this kind, appropriations which have already been refused by a previous Congress.

When the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] seeks to get my vote for an appropriation of this kind, by talking about the Western frontiers, I must ask him—

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a point of order. I want to know if it is in order to discuss the general bill upon a motion to strike out a particular section.

Mr. OLDS. I think the gentleman had better wait until he hears my remarks before he interrupts me.

Mr. STANLY. I have waited long enough to see that the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that upon a question of the character of that now pending, to strike out a clause in the bill, the range of argument is much broader than upon an amendment such as that presented by the gentleman from Indiana. The Chair thinks that upon a proposition to strike out an entire clause in a bill, providing for a particular appropriation, gentlemen may discuss the general range of expenditures of money by that department to which it applies.

Mr. OLDS. The remarks made by the gentleman from New York, in favor of a kindred portion of this bill, apply with equal force to the part proposed to be stricken out, and in answering his remarks, I shall be sustaining my motion to strike out the clause under consideration.

I ask with what grace does it come from the other side of the House to censure us for voting against this appropriation for the army? Why, upon a former occasion, gentlemen upon that side of the House have said they would not vote for an appropriation for the support of the army, though the enemy's cannon were battering down the walls of your Capitol. Did it not come from that side of the House when your soldiers were upon the plains of Mexico, fighting the battles of your country? Who then proposed to stop the supplies for your army, but welcome them with bloody hands to hospitable graves? Does the gentleman suppose he can frighten me to vote for this appropriation by saying that the hunters and settlers on our Western frontiers will suffer in consequence of the want of an army to protect them. These are the very men to protect your army, instead of your army protecting them. If you will give the settlers themselves the power to drive back the savage, and pay them as you do the soldiers of the Government, they would drive them back in less than quick time.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a point of order. I do not object to the gentleman's discussion, if I can reply to his argument about bloody hands and hospitable graves, &c., &c.; but I do object if I have no opportunity to reply.

Mr. OLDS. I should like to hear the gentleman reply to that point.

Mr. BROOKS. If I can reply to the gentleman I do not insist upon my point of order. But I do insist upon it unless I can do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will beg the indulgence of the committee to say, that when a motion is made to strike out an entire clause of the bill involving a particular appropriation, the range of legitimate debate necessarily extends to the question of the disposition of the money under the Government.

Mr. BROOKS. Then if I understand the Chair, it also involves the same right to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. OLDS. If the gentleman is willing like a man, and a brave man, to take the responsibility of the appropriation upon the administration of the country, instead of trying to shirk it off upon Congress, it would be unnecessary to use an argument of this kind. But when he attempts to shield the Administration by saying that Congress makes the appropriation, and therefore the responsibility is upon Congress, it becomes necessary, for gentlemen upon this side of the House, to vindicate themselves for voting against appropriations of this kind. It is for this reason that I rise to oppose this appropriation in common with others of a similar nature. The gentleman need not tell me that the necessity for this money has not been created by the Administration. Why, did not the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tell you the other day, that the drafts of your Government have been protested in consequence of not acting upon this deficiency bill? How did this pressing necessity come upon us? Why it was because the Administration had incurred this liability, although they had not the means of paying for it. It is true they cannot get the money out of the Treasury, without an order from Congress, but they have spent the money, they have incurred the liability, although they have not the means to pay it. And by spending that money they have created the necessity for the appropriation, and, coward like, they attempt to shield themselves behind the cry of "the Administration is not responsible. It is Congress alone that is responsible, for Congress alone can make the appropriations of money."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOUSTON. After hearing the speech of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS], I cannot well imagine upon what principle he can vote against this bill. He says that at one time some distinguished gentleman belonging to the political party on the other side of the House, said "he would not vote an appropriation, though the enemy were battering down the walls of the Capitol." At another time, another distinguished Whig, now officially connected with this Administration, said in his place in the United States Senate, that he would not vote supplies for our army in Mexico; that the Mexicans might "welcome our troops with bloody hands and hospitable graves;" and for the utterance of these sentiments, he will vote against this bill of supplies for our army. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS], and myself united in indignant condemnation of such unworthy and unpatriotic sentiments; we denounced them as outrages upon patriotism, upon the country as well as upon common decency; the great body of the people sympathized with us in those denunciations. Now, I ask him if he is disposed to follow so soon in the wake of those men; is he willing to follow so bad an example, and one, too, that has been so signally and indignantly rebuked by the honest, patriotic portion of the people? I hope not. I have a right to expect better things of the gentleman.

Mr. OLDS, (interrupting.) I wish to make a single remark. If they had the manliness to take the responsibility, then I would vote them all the supplies they asked.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will reply to that, but I must be excused—I cannot afford to lose any of my time. The gentleman says "if the Administration will take the responsibility, like men, he will vote the supplies." Then I ask him with what propriety can he vote against this bill? He does not deny that money is needed; not at all; but, on the contrary, admits that it is, by saying he will vote it if they will come forward like men, and avow the responsibility of their own expenditures. Sir, there is no principle to justify his course—they cannot escape responsibility by denying that it rests upon them; the country will make—will justly hold them responsible, and they cannot shift it off; and for them to say they are, or they are not, responsible, constitutes no proper grounds for support of, or opposition to, this bill. I have not the least doubt of their sole and entire responsibility for their expenditures; and whether they admit or deny it, shall not change my vote. If the supplies are necessary, they should be voted, regardless of the manliness or cowardice of the Administration, (to use the language of the gentleman from Ohio,) admitting or denying responsibility.

Another thing I wish to say here. Defeat this bill if you please; cut down or strike out these appropriations if you chose; but just as sure as we do, we will have to pay for it hereafter, and for the reason that you will not withdraw the army from the frontier—nor will you disband it. So long as you keep up the army, you must pay the expenses of it. And if we shall go into power at the next Presidential election, as I hope and believe will be the case, we will then have to appropriate to pay the expenses, if we refuse to appropriate now. That I wish to avoid. Expenditures to some extent will necessarily be made. Even if we should determine to bring home the army, some appropriation would be necessary. Under the head of transportation, there was nothing available on the first day of January last, as reported by the Quartermaster General and Secretary of War; and if that be true, you could not even bring home the army, if we were determined to do so, without an appropriation. Then why shall we hesitate? Why not promptly, and at once, vote what money we may think necessary, and hold the Administration responsible for its expenditures and wastes? What will we make by defeating this appropriation? If by doing so we could save the expense, and yet keep up the efficiency of the army, I would say do it; but at best it would only be a postponement of the time of payment; and we would have to pay in addition the increased cost of such supplies as might be purchased for the army, because of the embarrassed condition of the means to support that branch of the service.

Gentlemen say this money has been expended contrary to law. It shows that they have not examined into the question at all. I desire to read a section of the law, which authorizes the expenditure, although I occupy the same ground which I did in my hour's speech, and believe that the expenditures have been enormous, improper, and amounting to abuse. But here is the law, approved March 1st, 1820:

"No contract shall hereafter be made by the Secretary of State, or of the Treasury, or of the Department of War, or of the Navy, except under a law authorizing the same, or except under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, and except, also, contracts for the subsistence and clothing of the army and navy, and contracts by the quartermaster's department, which may be made by the Secretaries of these departments."

Now, sir, there is the law under which this has been done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ORR. It is in order to move an amendment to the original section, I believe.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move an amendment to the clause, the question being on striking out the section.

Mr. ORR. I move, then, to reduce the appropriation from $890,000 to $1.

I was, Mr. Chairman, a member of the last Congress, and was present when the debates took place with reference to reducing the expenses of this department of the Government. I heard gentlemen upon the other side of the House advocate that reduction, I believe, with more zeal, certainly with more energy, than any upon this side of the House. Congress investigated this subject thoroughly. The matter was fully debated, and they determined to reduce the estimates of the Department from $2,500,000 to $2,000,000. The act passed in that way, and what is the state of facts presented by this bill now before the committee for its consideration? Have the different departments of Government conformed their action to the instructions received from the two Houses of Congress? So far from their conforming themselves to those instructions they have violated the express commands of Congress, and it is an insult to the American Congress for the officers of the Government now to come in and say that we refused, nine months ago, to make this appropriation, and we have gone on and expended the money, and you must pay it. In other words, the House of Representatives, the representatives of the people, after expressing their will upon this subject, are to become mere auditors for the Administration. There is a principle involved in the bill, and an important principle, too. I am unwilling to become a mere auditor. Congress having the power to make appropriations, and the President being required to conform to the appropriations made by Congress, when he chooses to set aside the express will of both branches of Congress let the responsibility be upon his shoulders, and let him not come here to ask us to pay for his violation of law.

Now, sir, there is one condition upon which I will vote for this bill, and it is the only one; otherwise I will take my share of the responsibility of defeating it, and every item it contains. If the President will cause to be removed, commencing at the heads of departments, every officer that has been guilty of violating, indirectly, the law which Congress has passed, I will vote for this bill, otherwise I will not. I think the American Congress ought to be able to exercise as much control over the Executive branch of the Government as the House of Commons in Great Britain can exercise over the Executive Government there. If they can require a set of ministers to be removed before making an appropriation, can it be true that an American Congress, under a free Government, have not the same power to control and direct the Executive branch of the Government, as in a monarchy like that of Great Britain?

Mr. STANLY. No motion has yet been made to this bill, upon this—the Whig—side of the House, for the sake of talk, and I trust none will be made. The other side are responsible for it. Let that fact be distinctly stated. But before I proceed further, I tender the homage of my thanks to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, for the speech he just now made. They are the words of a patriot, lifting himself above the calls of the party, and becoming him; and a just rebuke to the extraordinary remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] Sir, what have we before us? Here is a proposition made to cut down this appropriation for the support of the Government and the army, because remarks have been made here as to the responsibility attaching to Congress and to the Executive. And the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] who talks about "bloody hands and hospitable graves," referring to old party matters, is properly rebuked, and he is willing to commit his countrymen to the bloody hands and hospitable graves of Indian hostilities, sooner than give this Government money to go on with! He refuses to vote, and will not vote, he says, for a bill, without which the army cannot be paid. The frontiers cannot be protected, treaties fulfilled, the soldiers in the service of their country cannot be fed, because a member of this House says Congress is responsible for cutting down appropriations! What a principle of conduct this is, by which a Representative in a Republican Government professes to regulate his conduct! Who are the Whigs in office spending this money improperly? General Jesup, quartermaster general—an honest man and a gallant soldier, though indirectly assailed—is a Democrat. If the Whigs can rely on his estimates, cannot the Democrats trust him? And the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] does not intend to vote for this bill unless the President dismisses the Secretary of War, and his other officers—General Jesup, I suppose, included. I appeal to that gentleman, in his moments of calm reflection, whether he can justify himself before the country, in such a declaration. Mr. Conrad's friends here defy and solicit any examination into his conduct. Instead of extravagance, you will see that he has practiced economy—Whig economy—not in talk, like Democratic economy, but in actual reduction of expenses. If the President has done this wrong, why has the gentleman sat silently upon this floor since the beginning of the session, and brought forth no impeachment? Why have we not heard his voice upon these alleged abuses, while this bill was under consideration, during the last week? Why did not the gentleman from South Carolina take an hour and assail the Administration? Why did he allow his friends to make Buncombe speeches upon State politics, presidential candidates, the want of harmony in the Democratic ranks, &c., &c., &c., while each speaker had an hour, instead of discussing this bill? Sir, because the Administration was unassailable, and gentlemen on the other side knew it. We courted investigation; the other side did not want to discuss the bill. When this side of the House challenged investigation, why did the gentleman from South Carolina sit still in his seat.

Mr. ORR. I ask leave to say a word.

Mr. STANLY. Not in my time of five minutes.

Mr. ORR. You did not want an answer.

Mr. STANLY. I defy the answer, when the gentleman has time. With all respect to the gentleman, we solicit and defy all investigation into the conduct of the Administration. But let gentleman specify—let them name where are the abuses, and by what officers committed—but not deal in general charges. I charge that the other side of the House did not wish to discuss this bill—they evaded it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BROOKS] made a point of order, that the discussion of the merits of presidential candidates was out of order. The Democratic party, who are here in a majority, decided against the gentleman from New York.

And now, after postponing and postponing this bill for weeks and weeks, refusing to discuss it, when they could discuss it, now, under the five-minutes rule, they fire away, and make indiscriminate charges, in the hope that no chance can be afforded to the Administration to defend their measures. Gentlemen on the other side seem to me to be disappointed in their efforts to find just cause for assailing the Administration; and now they quarrel because the Administration has done nothing wrong to oblige them, and give them an excuse for railing!

Sir, while I condemn, as all good men of all parties will condemn, the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] whose party vindictiveness is so strong, that he avows his willingness to let the soldiers on the western frontier starve, let the settlers on the western frontiers go unprotected from Indian hostilities, let the Government drafts remain protested and unpaid, I acquit the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. He has done his duty like a man, and like a patriot, in the remarks which he has made. If his friends do not follow them, it is not his fault, but theirs. Let the country judge between us, the minority here, and the gentlemen upon the other side of this House, who it is that stops the wheels of this Government. I call upon gentlemen on the other side to say whether they indorse the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] Are they willing to injure their country, because some member of Congress charges, and correctly charges, that Congress, not the Executive, are responsible for these deficiencies?

Let that issue be distinctly made up. We invite it; we challenge investigation into the conduct of the Administration and of the Departments. We will do our duty to our country, and while we defy them in all their impotent efforts, we only ask them to do their duty to their country.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. ORR moved pro forma to reduce the appropriation to $2.

I will reply, Mr. Chairman, to the interrogatory propounded to me by my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] and I think it will be a very successful reply—in my judgment, at least. There are fifty officers—there may be one hundred officers—who have been participants in disregard of the appropriations that were made by Congress, in directing their expenditures with reference to their own estimates, and not with regard to the appropriation. Well, now, suppose that I had set about an impeachment of these different officers—a hundred different officers—how long would it have required—how many days, weeks, and months would have been consumed in the impeachment of one single man? I do not believe, in the history of this Government, it has been attempted to impeach any officer of that grade. Certainly, many of them have been guilty of delinquencies, and have been removed. I can say to the President, If you retain officers in your Cabinet, under your direction, who willfully disregard the laws passed by Congress, and willfully expend larger sums of money than have been appropriated, and do not exclude them, you shall not have the money; but whenever you remove them, and give to the country an assurance and guarantee that such conduct shall not be repeated, then we will make the appropriation. As to those who were making an assault upon the Administration, while the hour debate was proceeding, all I have to say is, that my skirts are clear of it. I was opposed, and I wish that the gentleman from North Carolina was as much, to the closing of the debate as early as it was terminated. I thought this bill required to be debated; I thought that it ought to be thoroughly and fully investigated by this House; and I was satisfied more days even than had been appropriated to it would be insufficient for that purpose.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I have waited patiently, but with no inconsiderable solicitude, to hear some explanation from gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means, to justify a vote for those clauses in this bill by which appropriations are made to the quartermaster general's department, to supply alleged deficiencies. I have heard none that conveys a satisfactory or intelligible reason. I have heard no explanation as to the expenditure of the appropriation made to this bureau for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852. I have inquired of gentlemen on the Committee of Ways and Means what account has been given of the amount we did appropriate, and I understand they cannot tell how it has been expended. I do not intend to vote another dollar upon the allegation of a deficiency, until I hear what has been done with that which Congress intended to supply the quartermaster general for the whole year.

Mr. HOUSTON. I raise a point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky advocates the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina instead of opposing it.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am opposed to reducing the appropriation to $2, [Laughter;] for the reason that I do not intend to vote any. [Renewed laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not, then, in order.

Mr. MARSHALL. Then I will vote three dollars, and will oppose cutting the appropriation down to two, for the purpose of being allowed to say, undisturbed, what I want to say. I listened attentively to the hour speeches of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BROOKS,] and of the chairman of the Ways and Means, [Mr. HOUSTON,] but neither advanced a single idea which was not elicited in the able debate of last session on the army appropriation bill. Then the whole subject was elaborately discussed. The Committee on Military Affairs brought forward the estimates of the quartermaster general, and attempted to enforce them by calling attention to the extension of our territory—to considerations springing out of the treaty of Hidalgo—to the extension of the lines of supply; in fine, that committee then said all that the Secretary of War or the quartermaster general have since said to this Congress, and all the gentlemen have said on this bill. Nothing new has been elicited. Well, sir, Congress, after that full discussion, in a test vote, solemnly refused to vote the quartermaster general's estimates, and only voted the amount reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

I take it to have been the duty of the officer in charge of the appropriation to square his expenses to the means Congress provided. If he went on to expend the money in the face of this deliberate action of Congress, as though no such action had occurred, and he relied on this Congress to meet the deficiency so that his expenditures may equal the estimates which Congress refused, he has committed a grave error in my opinion. As this bill proposes to supply all Congress refused, and more, I want to know how the sum we voted has been expended, in order that I may judge of the necessity. I do not mean to make any attack upon any one. But, as a representative of the people, I do not intend, by my vote, to appropriate another dollar, under the circumstances of this case, until the Committee of Ways and Means explain, in some way, the manner in which this deficiency has arisen, and how the bureau has spent what was appropriated.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Administration is responsible.

Mr. MARSHALL. I know the gentleman has attacked the Administration, the Secretary of War, and the head of the army. I know the difficulty has sprung out of the course—

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Kentucky does me injustice. I wish to state a fact—

Mr. MARSHALL. I take it all back, then. [Laughter.] I had rather withdraw the remark on which the gentleman desires to comment, than to lose any of my time.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition is a very serious one. We know Congress refused, last session, the very supplies now asked as a deficiency. We ought to know why there is a deficiency, before we reverse the solemn decision of Congress at the instance of a military officer, who asked for this money and was refused. There is a question of power, of dignity, of duty, here. I do not think we shall act wisely or well to vote this money, when we hear no explanation of what has been done with the appropriation which was made for the whole year. For one, I would rather take the responsibility of disbanding the army, than to vote a dollar under this state of the case. I would withdraw my forces altogether, and leave the people of Texas and New Mexico to defend themselves as best they may, and afterwards pay their expenses, rather than to abandon a constitutional fundamental principle of this Government. We hold the keys of the Treasury, and we are responsible to the people—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOWARD moved pro forma to increase the appropriation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there not an amendment to an amendment pending? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] moves to strike out a clause, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] moves to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The ground the Chair takes is, that any gentleman has a right to perfect a clause before the question is taken upon a motion to strike out, inasmuch as that excludes the whole clause. The gentleman from South Carolina has made an amendment, and the Chair thinks that an amendment to that is in order.

Mr. HOWARD. There is no member of this Congress who was a member of the last that will not be astonished at the statement of my honorable friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR], that the Committee of Ways and Means of the last Congress investigated this matter, asserted that the amount proposed to be appropriated was too large, and therefore reduced it. Why, sir, he cannot have forgotten that the honorable gentleman from the Committee of Ways and Means, who belongs to the other side of the House, not now in his seat, [Mr. TOOMBS] said, that in making this motion he struck in the dark, and did not know whether he was striking intelligibly or not. Now, under that state of things, we are gravely told that the last Congress deliberated and investigated this whole matter, ascertained that too much money was asked for, and, therefore, they cut it down. Now, it is complained against the Executive officer as a fault, that he has found no person to cut down nearly the whole amount of the deficiency. Sir, precisely the reverse is true—that Congress did not investigate, that Congress did not examine the estimates, neither did the Committee of Ways and Means of the last Congress go to the Department and ascertain if too much money was asked. No such thing was ever heard upon this floor at the last session of Congress. The whole argument was, that the amount looked large—looked like an extravagant amount, and ought to be cut down without rhyme or reason. Now, I think it is within the recollection of gentlemen here, who will bear me out, that that was in substance the position those gentlemen occupied upon that occasion. And what was said by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs upon that occasion? He said that he had examined this matter; that he had been to the Department; that he had investigated it, and prophesied that it would be necessary to provide for it at this session by a deficiency bill, as the result has shown. The records show why that was so. The estimates were returned to General Jesup, because it was said that they were too large, and he was asked to cut them down. He looked them over, investigated, returned them, and stated in his report to that Congress that they were made upon full consideration, and could not be reduced. It comes here now as a deficiency, because the last Congress failed to do its duty to give what the United States service required under existing laws and existing establishments.

The honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] says that he had rather vote to reduce or disband the army than to vote for this deficiency bill. Now, if he has the nerve to propose that, he shows some consistency in his action; but to keep up the army to its present numbers, and then to refuse the necessary money to support it, is the queerest sort of economy that ever entered into the brain of a statesman. If you desire to economize, reduce the source of the expenditures. Do not keep up your establishment, and then refuse to appropriate the necessary amount to defray the expenses of that establishment.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. As a great deal of reference has been made to the conduct of the Committee of Ways and Means at the last session, in striking down the estimates which were transmitted to us from the War and other Departments, I feel it due to myself that I should state precisely what was our action at that time. When those estimates for the army and navy were brought to the consideration of our committee, by their direction, I addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, and also to the Secretary of the Navy, informing them that we were not satisfied with the large amounts which were asked for, and that a disposition existed in the committee to curtail the amount of money appropriated to this branch of the public service; and we requested them to reform their estimates with a view to reduction in the amount of appropriations. To that official letter, I received a reply, in which we were told that the estimates which they had sent in were as small as they could recommend, and that they had cut them down to the lowest cent. When we received this communication, by the direction of the committee, I wrote a second letter, in which I inquired if Congress was determined to make reductions, at what point they should be made, in their opinion, with the least detriment to the public service. In reply to that inquiry, the Secretary of the Navy, although expressing his opinion that the estimates were as low as they ought to be, pointed out the places at which to strike, if we determined to strike, and we made in the Navy bill the reductions under those heads where the Secretary informed us they could be made with the least detriment to the public service.

I am told by one of the gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means, I have not examined the subject carefully, and that he has reduced his expenditures accordingly. The Secretary of War called upon General Jesup, and others under him, to answer these inquiries of ours, and the reply was, that the estimates could not be reduced anywhere without detriment to the public service, and they declined to point out any places at which we could most safely strike, if we were determined to strike at all. Under this impression, the Committee of Ways and Means, by a vote to which I did not give a very cordial support, determined to cut them down. I say, I did not give it a very cordial support—not because I was not as vehement as any member of the committee in favor of retrenchment in these two branches of the public service, but because I thought it would come to nothing, and to guard myself upon that point when it came before the House, I stated it would come to nothing. With this letter from the War Department before us, and from my knowledge of the manner in which some of these army officers—I am not speaking of the Secretary of War at all—have administered their departments, I knew perfectly well, and I so stated, that the effect of the reduction would be to create the necessity for a deficiency bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on Mr. HOWARD's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

The question was then taken on Mr. ORR's amendment, and it was rejected.

The question then recurring upon Mr. OLDS's motion to strike out the clause, it was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

The next clause was then read, as follows:

"For constructing, repairing, and enlarging barracks, quarters, hospitals, store-houses, stables, wharves, and ways, at the several posts and army depôts, for temporary cantonments, and the authorized furniture for barrack-room of non-commissioned officers and soldiers, gun-houses for the protection of cannon, including the necessary tools and materials for the objects enumerated, and for rent of quarters, and offices for officers, and barracks and hospitals for troops, where there are no public buildings for their accommodation, for store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, and of grounds for summer cantonments and encampments, $219,000."

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to strike out, in the eightieth and eighty-first lines, the words, "for rents of quarters, and offices for officers."

I should have preferred it, if this bill had been referred back to the Committee of Ways and Means, that they might have brought before the House of Representatives some intelligible account about the money which has already been appropriated for the quartermaster general's department for the current fiscal year. I hoped, upon a closer examination, they would be able to give a distinct idea how much of that appropriation has been spent, where expended, and how expended—at all events how it was expected to be expended. We might as well resolve ourselves into a registry chamber, for the mere purpose of registering the edicts of the Executive Departments as to do what we are now doing—to vote any amount of the public money the quartermaster general may choose to ask, without the Committee of Ways and Means, from its chairman down to its last member—being able to give the House or the country any intelligible account how the money already appropriated has been spent, or what he wants with that he now asks for. The chairman of the Ways and Means spoke of abuses—great abuses in this bureau. Sir, there are enormous abuses which the quartermaster general himself has incidentally set forth in his report but without disapprobation, and as the apparent reasons why he should have more money. These abuses belong, it is true, to the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1851, but they account for the way the public money is administered upon through that channel. In this item of house rent for instance: What do you think—what will the country think—of quartering a major and one or two subalterns in New Mexico in a house at an annual rental of $2,100. Look at the bill, sir; several of your platoon officers paying rent as high as $600 or $800 per year for quarters for themselves only! Why, sir, it appears that it takes more money to shelter a company of dragoons in such places as Las Vegas, or Dona Ana, in New Mexico, than the establishment of the American Minister at Paris costs. Just think of it, sir—a company of fifty soldiers on the frontier living in a rented house and paying for it, as rent, $3,360 per year—for the hay to feed their horses $35 to $40 per ton—for their corn $2 50 to $3 per bushel, and hauling these articles too at public expense twenty or thirty miles, employing for that purpose seven mule teams of six mules each, when they say each mule costs for his keeping, $310 per year, or for the forty-two mules $13,020 per year as the price of keeping. You must add to this the transportation of horse medicines—the wages of farriers, forage masters, &c., &c. These expenditures, sir, are officially communicated to you by the quartermaster general as the way the public money was spent only in the last fiscal year. Can we see these enormous charges—these exorbitant charges—with indifference? In face of these things shall we supply the quartermaster general again with as much money as he chooses, yet know nothing of the way in which his administration of the present year is being conducted? Why, sir, it would be far cheaper to house the Indians, than the American soldiers—far cheaper and easier.

I heard the gentleman on my right [Mr. Brooks] speak on yesterday of these Indians, which inhabit the borders of Texas, and I was surprised at the wide departure of his statement of their force from accounts submitted with the report of the quartermaster general. The gentleman spoke of their number being twenty thousand. Now, Captain French, who has been among them since 1848, reports to General Jesup, that of all tribes, ages, sizes, and sexes, the Indians who inhabit the frontier of Texas—say on this side of New Mexico—do not number more than four thousand, and he actually returns a census of the tribes. To take care of these four thousand Indian men, women, and children, we have several Indian agents, and about one thousand eight hundred troops. If we are to pay house rent for the officers, at $600 per year, and for dragoon companies at $3,600 per year, it would be better to bribe the Indians to occupy civilized habitations, and to feed them, than to present against them so expensive a military array. Look at it: $219,000 wanted to supply deficiencies for house rent, &c., &c. I think, sir, we should teach the officers, at least, that they are expected to live at a cheaper rental, and therefore that we should lop off this item.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to correct a statement which the gentleman from Kentucky has made, about the Indians in Texas. An agent who has been among them for many years—while they were under the government of Texas, and since then up to the present Administration—estimates the number of those Indians at about twenty-five thousand. That is, no doubt, a large estimate. The probability is, that the resident Indians in Texas are about ten thousand in number. But in addition to this, there are Indians in New Mexico and in the adjoining Indian territory belonging to the United States, who congregate in Texas at particular seasons—winter, for instance—and mix with the Texas Indians, and then there are a very large number; in summer, however, it is much smaller. But it is because we have interlopers there, belonging to other States, and because the Government of the United States have removed the Indians west, and they go into Texas, where they ought never to have gone, that a large portion of this appropriation is necessary.

Mr. PARKER, of Indiana, moved a pro forma amendment to the amendment, and said: I simply wish to make a suggestion in regard to a few thoughts which have dropped from the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.] He says that he is opposed to these appropriations, and more especially to those which he has named, because the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and the Administration have not taken it upon themselves to show him in detail, the importance of these appropriations. Now, if the gentleman from Kentucky had listened to the remarks made by the chairman of the Ways and Means, in his speech to-day, he would have noticed that he stated expressly that he could not go into these things in detail; and the gentleman from Kentucky must be aware of the fact that it would have been utterly impossible for him to have done so. Why, if he had done it, he would have needed a week rather than an hour. Suppose he had done it, in what attitude would this House be placed in to go into all these details? It strikes me that we would have been converting ourselves into a kind of court of justice of the peace.

Now, I am satisfied, from the fact that the Administration of the Government is in the hands of the Whigs, that the Committee of Ways and Means is a Democratic committee, and that the chairman of that committee comes here and asks for these appropriations; that is enough for me, especially where deficiencies are said to exist. And do they not exist here, for this rent?

I call the attention of the committee to the notable fact that the act of 1820, which was read by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, directly authorizes these contracts to be made for the subsistence of our troops. If it is our duty to withhold the supplies, let us, in the first place, step forward and withdraw the troops. But after the troops have been placed in the frontier, let us not starve them. It is not our duty to do that.

I will tell you, however, what I am in favor of, so far as this bill is concerned. Wherever there is an item in it, that is not for a deficiency to meet a contract already made, my vote cannot be given for it. I am for holding that rod over any Administration, be it Whig or Democratic. Your army and navy, however, when they have been put upon the field and upon the water, must be sustained there, and it is our duty to do it.

Mr. STANLEY. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and I wish to say a few words upon it. We are informed that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] inquired of the Ways and Means, and could not get the information he wanted. Now, did he go before the committee and inquire for it, or did he go here and there, to the members, in social chat, when gentlemen were busy writing letters, or reading newspapers, or had other things more important to employ their time? If my honorable friend wants information about the details of these items, and if he thinks the committee is not competent to give it, let him introduce a resolution calling for the details, bring up the papers that are before the committee, and devote his attention to them. If he wishes to attack these estimates, as a friend or foe to the Administration, let him, when he has a chance to make an hour speech, attack the deficiency bill, and not occupy his time in replying to his colleague in reference to Butler and Fillmore, and their respective positions on the slavery question. It does not come, I think, with a very good grace, from the gentleman from Kentucky, to lecture the Committee of Ways and Means about the manner in which they have discharged their duty. It is true that there are six Democrats and three Whigs on that committee, and a Democratic chairman; but if my honorable friend finds fault with the manner in which we have discharged our duty, I shall ask to be excused from being upon the committee, and that my friend from Kentucky may be put there. Let him try his hand at it. Perhaps he may be able to take better care of the ways and means of the country, and will belikely get more information about them than we can, although I think we have got as much information as a Committee of Ways and Means has ever done, and have given it to the House. We would have given more, if the House had allowed us. Let him look to the report of the Secretary of War; he will find all the facts there; he will find that the appropriations have already been a great deal cut down. The gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has announced that he intends to offer as amendments various appropriations that are indispensably necessary—amounting to some two or three hundred thousand dollars. We have exercised the most rigid economy; and I say to the gentleman from Kentucky, again, that it was exceedingly unkind, and not what we on this side of the House had a right to expect from him, as a friend of the Administration, to scold the Administration as he does, or quite fair to say that he cannot get information from the Committee of Ways and Means. If he cannot, it is his duty to go to the head of the Department, and get it there, and not come in here and scold us.

The question was then taken on Mr. PARKER's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to amend the amendments by striking out the words "for rent," and I do it for the purpose of replying to the gentleman from North Carolina. It is exceedingly convenient, Mr. Chairman, for gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means, to say that they were reading newspapers, or writing letters, or found employment more to their taste than to answer inquiries of gentlemen who, as representatives, inquired in regard to what the committee had ascertained about this matter. I did not stand here to lecture the Committee of Ways and Means; but I made the statement, that I had attempted to learn what conclusion the committee had attained, and what information they had obtained as to the manner in which the money heretofore appropriated, had been spent. He says that they did not choose to go into details; that they had not time to go into details. I say that, as I understand it, the Committee of Ways and Means have not any information in regard to it, and that they have accepted, so far as this year's appropriations are concerned, the declarations of the quartermaster general, or the officers of his bureau, "that the accounts have not come in, and that, therefore, no accounts can be given to them." I say that it involves the quartermaster general's bureau in the dilemma of having sent the public money here and there, without understanding how it was to be spent, or how they intended it should be spent, otherwise an account could be given which would be satisfactory. I do not ask for details. I want to know how much money has been appropriated to New Mexico; how much has been sent to the frontiers of Texas; and I want to know what they have done with it, how it is to be expended, and that they shall give me some conclusions on which I may be justified again to draw the purse strings of this nation.

It will not do—so far as I am concerned—for gentlemen to say that I belong to this side of the House or to that side of the House. Sir, when my duty as an American representative is concerned, I belong to no side of the House. I belong to the country. I belong to the people. When I came here, I understood myself as being an American Representative—a representative of the interests of the whole country, and I should scorn myself if I could hold any place here, understanding that my allegiance was due to a party and not to my country. When I am called upon to appropriate the money of this people, I must know how the money which I have already put into the hands of the Executive has been spent, and so help me God, I will never vote a cent without knowing it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] charges this Administration with violating the law and abusing the public confidence by a waste of the public money, not only by wasteful extravagance, but by expending money not in pursuance of law, but against law, and the expressed will of Congress. Now, I want the country to notice this fact. I repeat it, and dwell upon it. I agree with him, and I want the country to know that the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky—a friend of this Administration, who consumed an hour the other day in irrelevant and illegitimate debate in praising the President of the United States, and in endeavoring to persuade the country that he should be reflected—voluntarily comes forward and bears testimony to what I say, that there has been extravagance—that there have been abuses by this Administration. I admire the gentleman's candor in admitting these abuses against his particular favorite for the Presidency, and I again call upon the country to notice that my statements are sustained by this distinguished friend of President Fillmore and his administration.

But the gentleman says that the Committee of Ways and Means have given no intelligible account of how this money was expended. He seems to have paid no attention to the debate, or, it may be, the committee do not understand what he may call an intelligible account. The gentleman notified me beforehand that he was going to call upon me to-day for information. Did he do it? Did he call upon me when I was making my hour speech? I would have responded to him, and given him all the information I possessed upon any point he might have presented. I might not have been able to give an intelligible account, but I would have responded freely. But, lo and behold! my speech is made, and he has not asked for it. And now, he gets up here and complains that we have given him no information of these things. Whose fault is it? Even admitting the correctness of his complaint, he is more to blame than the committee; for, seeing we were not discussing the true point of the case, it was his duty to call us to it, and ask for the particular information desired by him. Private conversation is not to be repeated here, and I do not intend to refer to it; but he notified me in the presence of several gentlemen: that he would call on me, in the course of my speech, for information. He never made the call, and therefore his complaint is not well founded. And now I use him as a witness, to sustain the fact of the existence of the abuses spoken of in my hour speech. His evidence is before the country, and he can neither withdraw it nor evade its force.

Sir, I would like to know of the honorable gentleman, if he believes there is no money in the Treasury that can be used to sustain the army, what his object is in this matter? Do you want to disband the army? Your President has not the power to do it. You and I, with our fellow-members, have the power. If you want to disband the army, do it; if you want to keep up the army, do it. But let us do one thing or the other. Do not let us keep up an establishment which we cannot feed and will not clothe. Let us not pretend to keep up an army on the frontier of our States and Territories, and refuse to furnish them with ammunition to shoot an Indian, if one should attempt to commit a depredation.

Now, I put it to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] and I put it to every gentleman in this committee, Do you not believe that this or some other amount of money ought to be appropriated? Do you believe there is enough to supply these objects yet unexpended; if so, the Secretary of War has acted in bad faith to Congress; he says it is not there. If you make it as clear as it can be made—as clear as a sunbeam—that the money has been wasted by the Administration, I would, even in that case, not hesitate a moment to vote the appropriations necessary to carry on the Government and supply the place of the money wasted. I would restrict the Administration by legislation. I would do all that was necessary to restrict the Administration, so far as was in my power as a member of Congress, would aid, to the extent of my ability, in an investigation of the abuses; but I would not hesitate to vote the supplies necessary to protect our frontiers, and to enable this Government to observe and faithfully execute its treaty stipulations with Mexico. I would protect the emigrants, while on the roads to our distant frontiers, against the barbarities of the wild, savage, and remorseless Indians that hover along their pathway. I would save them from butchery. I would protect them against the tomahawk and scalping-knife of the wild Indians. It is due to the emigrant, and as far as my vote goes, he shall have it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is about the usual time for adjournment, and as we are not likely to make any progress in the bill to-day, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill 207, being a bill "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two," and had come to no conclusion thereon.

COMPROMISE MEASURES.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask the Chair what is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of the States for resolutions, beginning with South Carolina.

Mr. JACKSON. I move that the House do now proceed to the regular order of business. If there are no resolutions to be offered from the State of South Carolina, I have a resolution to offer when Georgia is called.

The SPEAKER. Resolutions are in order from the State of Georgia.

Mr. JACKSON. I offer the following resolution, upon the passage of which I move the previous question.

Mr. CABELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make this inquiry of the Chair: If the House adjourn now, what will be the position of the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. GENTRY. The resolution has not been received nor read.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Georgia, as I understand it, is upon the floor until his resolution is read; and until he yields the floor no gentleman can get it to move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the resolution would be in order when resolutions are again called for. The resolution will, however, be read for information.

It was then read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves and the act of the last Congress for that purpose included—and that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision, of the questions embraced in the acts of the last Congress known as the compromise, and of questions generally connected with the institution of slavery, as unnecessary, useless, and dangerous.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves the resolution which has just been read, and upon its passage he calls the previous question.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, demanded the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

The motion was then agreed to—yeas 84, noes not counted—and

The House adjourned till twelve o'clock, to-morrow.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. DOTY gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill with the following title:

"A bill providing for the free navigation of the St. Lawrence river, and for reciprocal trade with Canada."

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of Shipley L. Foulke and others, assistant marshals of Henry county, Indiana, praying for additional compensation for taking the late census.

By Mr. PEASLEE: The memorial of Rufus K. Parker and others, citizens of New Hampshire, in behalf of the Western Farm and Village Association of the city of New York.

On motion by Mr. PORTER, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House, petitions of citizens of St. Louis, Missouri, asking the passage of an act to provide for holding an additional term of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Missouri, and to refer the same to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 23, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. WADE. The case of the heirs and executors of Samuel Prioleau, of the State of South Carolina, was at an early day referred to the Committee of Claims, and was considered by that committee, who, doubtfully and hesitatingly, I may say, came to a conclusion, and directed me to make an adverse report. The report was made principally, and probably entirely, upon the ground that the claim appeared to be an antiquated one. Although it appeared to be equitable, there was no evidence before the committee to show why it had been delayed so long; and in the absence of any evidence to account for that long delay, we came to the conclusion that we ought to make an adverse report. The subject was referred to the committee on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina. He was not present when we had it under consideration, and therefore was not able to give us any light upon the subject. We made an adverse report, and it was adopted by the Senate. We have now been furnished with evidence that accounts for the delay; and the committee have had the matter under consideration, and have directed me to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take the papers from the files, and again to refer them, for we fear that we have done injustice in making the adverse report.

The PRESIDENT. The report having been concurred in, the subject cannot again be referred but by unanimous consent.

Mr. WADE. I will state the equities of the claim, and the circumstances under which it is presented to us, if it is desired.

Mr. SEWARD. It is not necessary.

Mr. WADE. The committee desire to have the papers referred to them again, that they may take them into further consideration.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated that it requires unanimous consent. An adverse report having been made and concurred in, of course the papers cannot be acted on again unless further evidence is introduced to show that the report was not correct.

No objection being made, the papers were ordered to be taken from the files and referred to the Committee of Claims.

mail from Harrisonburg to Natchitoches; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

WHEELING BRIDGE.

Mr. BELL. I present the memorial of Joseph Woods and a considerable number of other gentlemen, respectable and intelligent citizens of Nashville and its vicinity, setting forth that they have heard, with considerable alarm and great concern, the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Wheeling Bridge, on the suit of the State of Pennsylvania, and they pray that Congress will exercise whatever powers it may possess to prevent what they consider an arbitrary and unnecessary exercise of power by any department of the Government of the United States, in decreeing the demolition of that great work, because the owners of only seven—as it is alleged is proved in the case—of the many hundreds of steam-boats navigating the river, have thought proper to elevate their chimnies higher than usual, and higher than is thought to be essential, and because they do not choose to lower them. I move to refer the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

LINE OF STEAMERS TO HAMBURG.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I present to the Senate the petition of C. Hansen, of the city of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, who proposes that with the consent and patronage of Congress, he will establish a line of steamers from that city via Rotterdam, in the Netherlands, to Gluxstadt, in Holstein, on the river Elbe, near Hamburg, so as to make semi-monthly passages for the transportation of mails, passengers, and freight. He offers to build four steamers, each of two thousand tons. The first two to be completed in two years, and the two others in three years. He asks Congress to pay him $100,000 per annum for the first three years, $85,000 for the next three years, and $75,000 for the last four years, for each vessel in active service.

The first benefit which the United States would derive would be the establishment of semi-monthly mails, which in time would remunerate the Government. The German population already in the United States is estimated at five millions, and it is increasing at the rate of more than one hundred thousand a year. The next benefit to the Government would be an increase of the naval steam marine, since the United States would have the right to take the vessels at any time at cost. A third advantage which would accrue to the country would be the substitution of the safe, wholesome, and speedy American steam-vessels for the importation of emigrants, in place of the small, uncomfortable, and unhealthy sailing vessels of Hamburg, Rotterdam, and Antwerp. The new line would receive the trade of the three great rivers of continental Europe: the Elbe, Weser, and the Rhine. The fourth and capital advantage which it would secure would be the direct carrying trade and navigation in the central continental Europe which is now nearly engrossed by foreigners. The entire tonnage, inwards and outwards, in the trade of the United States and the Hanse Towns, in a single year, belonging to foreigners is a hundred and eighty-three thousand tons.

The entire tonnage owned by Americans within the same period, was forty thousand tons. The value of the freights received during the same period by foreigners, was $1,470,000, while the value of the freights received by the Americans was only $384,000, showing that the trade, as now carried on, is worth $1,000,000, all of which, by the adoption of this enterprise, might be secured for ourselves. I remark, once more, that this great trade is carried on chiefly by British merchants. Nine tenths of the American cotton consumed in continental Europe, is shipped first to England, and thence is carried to the continent, thus subjecting us to a large tribute in the way of expenses and commissions paid to English merchants. The enterprise connects itself, of course, with the present Bremen line, and these two lines would enable us to take control of a trade which at present we only divide with foreigners at great disadvantage to ourselves.

The petition is sustained by documents and references which I commend to the most favorable consideration of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which I beg leave to refer the whole subject. I move that the petition be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the petition of William R. Nevins, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

VANDERBILT STEAMERS.

Mr. BADGER. A number of memorials were heretofore referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, asking for the establishment of lines of steamers. By the direction of the committee, the chairman asked that they be discharged from the further consideration of them, and it was done accordingly. I now desire to submit a motion that one of those memorials—that of Vanderbilt & Co.—be taken from the files, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I wish to mention, in this connection, that the Naval Committee made no report upon the merits of the applications, one way or the other; but considering that there was nothing in them that made them appropriate for their consideration, they asked to be discharged from them. I think the one which I have mentioned is entitled to the consideration of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

MAIL CONTRACTS.

Mr. CLEMENS. A communication was yesterday received from the Secretary of the Navy in relation to steam-ships. Upon my motion it was laid on the table and ordered to be printed. I learn that it will be some two weeks before it can be printed, as our public printer has managed to get behind with the business. I move, therefore, that it be taken from the table, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to increase the efficiency of the artillery; which was read, and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report, accompanied by a joint resolution concerning the national defenses; which was read, and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

A motion, by Mr. SHIELDS, to print two thousand additional copies of the two last-mentioned reports, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Avery Downer, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Santiago E. Arguello, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were submitted the following petitions, submitted adverse reports thereon:

- The petition of Squire Moore;
- The petition of Joseph W. Edwards;
- The petition of Elisha Merriman; and
- The petition of William Blodgett.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. HUNTER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to make an appropriation of lands to satisfy the claims of those holding outstanding Virginia military land warrants.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to amend an act entitled "An act for laying off the towns of Fort Madison and Burlington, in the county of Des Moines, and the towns of Belleville, Dubuque, and Peru, in the county of Dubuque, Territory of Wisconsin."

CLERK IN THE SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

Mr. CASS. I offer the following resolution, which, under the rule, will lie over for a day:

Resolved, That Y. P. Page, who has been engaged in clerical and other duties in the office of the Secretary of the Senate for some years past, be paid the same per diem compensation, from the beginning of the present session, as is allowed to the committee clerks of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. Let it be considered now. I do not think there can be any possible objection to it.

Mr. CASS. If there is no objection, I ask for its consideration at this time.

No objection being made, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT. As it is a resolution providing for the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate, it is necessary that it should have three readings.

The resolution was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ADAMS. I would inquire of the Senator who introduced this resolution, what is the necessity for it? If there is a law authorizing the Secretary to obtain necessary assistance, I should like to know what necessity there is for this?

Mr. CASS. The person mentioned in the resolution is now in the Secretary's office and has been for years, but has only been paid as a messenger. All who know the young man know that he is a most efficient clerk. There is no reason in the world why he should not be paid as a clerk, when he is doing the duty of that office. He may be called a messenger; but every Senator knows that he has been doing the work of a clerk, and that he does it most admirably.

Mr. BADGER. There is no doubt about that. All who have been here any length of time, know it.

The resolution was reported to the Senate, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time and passed.

SALARIES OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill to repeal the proviso in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, for the year ending the 30th June, 1852, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851, relating to the salaries of the officers of the Territories of the United States. I presume it will be acted upon without much debate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment.

The amendment of the committee is in the form of a substitute for the original bill. It provides in the first section, "that if any officer of any Territory of the United States shall hereafter absent himself from such Territory and his official duties, for a period exceeding sixty days in any one year, without the leave of the President of the United States, he shall not be paid any salary for the period of such absence, unless good cause for such absence shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President;" and, in the second section, that the proviso contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1852, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851, relating to the payment of the salaries of officers of the territories of the United States, be thereby repealed.

Mr. HUNTER. I would like to know what the proviso is, which it is proposed to repeal.

The Secretary read the proviso, as follows:

"Provided, That the salaries specified above for any of the officers of any of the Territories of the United States, shall not be paid in any case when any of said officers shall absent themselves from said Territories and their official duties for a period of time greater than sixty days."

Mr. GEYER. It will be perceived that the proviso which it is proposed to repeal, annexes a forfeiture of the whole salary as the effect of an absence of sixty days—no matter from what cause, or under what circumstances. It provides that in case of absence, the fact of absence may be taken as judgment against an officer, and he is thereafter to receive no salary whatever. The first section of the proposed amendment designs to effect a change in that particular. One defect intended to be cured is, that where the proviso leaves it uncertain whether the several absences may not be taken together to make up the sixty days. It designs also to cure another defect, which is this: The proviso, I understand, was inserted with the view to affect the officers in Minnesota; and, as it stands, if the different absences are not to be added together, any one of the officers in Minnesota may be absent nearly the whole year. He could absent himself for anything short of sixty days, return to the Territory for a day or two, then absent himself again. To obviate that objection, the first section provides, that if he should be absent from the Territory and his official duties for a period exceeding sixty days in any one year, the consequences shall follow. Another design of the amendment is to provide for such emergencies as may arise. Officers who are appointed for these different Territories may have occasion to return for their families, and sometimes will have occasion to absent themselves on public duty; and it is contemplated, when they do so absent themselves, with the permission of the President, or when they furnish a sufficient excuse in the judgment of the President, that the penalty shall not attach. Another object is to make the provision permanent; not to have it in an appropriation act, but in a permanent law, operating upon the officers of Territories in all times. I will now move as an amendment to the amendment the following, to come in at the end of the second section:

And the salaries of said officers, which have heretofore accrued, shall be paid, anything in the said proviso to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. CHASE. I was about to move an amendment, which it seems to me would be more appropriate than that offered by the Senator from Missouri. It is to strike out the last clause of the section, which will leave the judges of the Territories to the discretion of the President for permission to absent themselves from their official duties. In the organization of the Territories of New Mexico and Utah, Congress thought fit to insert a clause providing that the judges should not be absent from the performance of their judicial functions more than sixty days without forfeiting their salaries. It may be, and I think is reasonable, that they should be allowed, in cases of emergency, and with the sanction of the President, to leave their Territories; but to permit absences at discretion for an unlimited time, and appeals to the indulgence of the President, not merely for payment after this law shall have been enacted, but for payment before it, seems to me to be going too far. We all know how important it is to the inhabitants of the Territories that the presence of these officers shall be secured; and we know, too, that in regard to the particular Territories which I have named, it is indispensable that they shall be retained in their places by some condition of this kind. I have heard from highly respectable gentlemen of New Mexico, for instance, that the state of things there is so undesirable, that if the judges can be allowed to leave their posts, traverse the country at pleasure, and then throw themselves on the discretion of the President to be allowed their salaries, notwithstanding such absence, it will be almost impossible to retain them in their places. It seems to me to be our duty not to go further than the law now stands. At most, we should not do more than authorize the judges to absent themselves with the leave of the President. I shall vote against the proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri, and then move to strike out the last clause of the first section.

Mr. GEYER. It occurs to me that recent events should admonish us that it is necessary to authorize, under certain circumstances, the officers to leave a Territory. I do not pretend to form any judgment as to the cause of the absence of the officers of the Territory of Utah; but if what they represent approaches the truth, their condition there would have been intolerable. It may be that, in those remote Territories, they cannot remain and attend to their duties without encountering difficulties that few men would be willing to encounter. Now, sir, in the Territory of Utah, where it is said a state of things exists which renders it altogether uncomfortable for any civilized Christian to reside, an officer must retire from the Territory, and he cannot wait for leave from the President of the United States. He can go into the Indian country, and remain there for a period less than sixty days, under existing laws; return to the Territory, and retire again to the Indian country. As the law stands, the judgment against the officer is peremptory, and is left to the accounting officer, and to him alone. It is now proposed to submit it to the judgment of the President of the United States. If the case should occur—I do not say it has occurred—that the condition of a territorial officer would be rendered intolerable, that his own safety and the safety of his family would require him to leave it, it seems to me he ought not to be deprived of his salary on that account, because he was, in effect, expelled. I think we may safely confide that trust to the President of the United States. Few of those officers, unless they had good cause for their absence, would submit their case to the President of the United States in a matter of that sort, when they must come here, make their application at the seat of Government, and present the facts and circumstances under which they were induced to absent themselves from the Territory. If the consent of the President could be obtained beforehand in all cases, and we were sure of it, I should have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio; but, as it stands now, they are in a condition very much exposed.

Mr. WALKER. I desire to make an inquiry of those who have had this subject under consideration, and the inquiry may be understood by stating that to which it is designed to relate. If I understand it, most of the officers of one of the Territories have left, with the intention of not returning again; but they are, nevertheless, still in office. Now, sir, will not the operation of this legislation be to continue their salaries, notwithstanding they may remain here in Washington, or elsewhere in the United States, and have no connection whatever with the Territories, and no connection with the duties of the office, other than merely holding the position of officers? Will it not continue them, and continue their salaries?

Mr. WELLER. If I understand the matter alluded to by the Senator who has just taken his seat, it is different from what he has stated. I understand that these judges and other officers desire to return to Utah, but they have reported to the President, as I learn, that they are unable to execute the civil law, or the laws of Congress, in the Territory, without the aid of the military, and that their persons are not safe. The question now is, what step can be taken so as to secure obedience in that Territory to the laws that may be enacted by Congress? In my judgment it would be very impolitic to send a military force there, avowedly for the purpose of executing the civil law. But the difficulty may be obviated in this way: it is necessary that some military posts should be established through that Territory, not only for the protection of the inhabitants from the Indians, but, what to me is a matter of more importance, for the protection of emigrants who are constantly passing that route to the State which I, in part, represent. Those military posts and depôts might be established as near as possible to Salt Lake, because in that vicinity there would be afforded facilities for obtaining supplies, which could not be obtained elsewhere. They would at all times be ready to aid the civil authorities in the execution of the law. If they were established, I have no doubt that the judges could return to the Territory in perfect safety, to execute the mandates of Congress. I would not send a military force along with the judges, for the reason that I am unwilling to treat these people as designing to subvert this Government. I know that there is no very friendly feeling among them towards the Government, but I would treat them as a loyal people, although, at the same time, I would have a military force to compel them to respect the law.

Mr. WALKER. I am obliged to the Senator for the information and views which he has expressed. As far as I have reflected upon this subject, my mind has come very much to the same conclusion that his has, that something of the kind he mentions will be necessary in the Territory referred to. But the only question in my mind, in view of this, is, whether the legislation now proposed is not premature? In view of what has been said, in view of the condition of things there, there is much more to be done before those gentlemen can enter upon the duties of their offices, before they can, in my opinion, safely remain in that Territory.

Another question is, whether, while we are legislating in view of the state of things which we know to exist there, we shall make provision for the salaries of officers who either do not, or cannot, discharge the duties of their offices. For one, I must say, that I cannot agree to it. These gentlemen have returned to the States. They tell us the reason why they have returned. They acknowledge that they cannot discharge the duties of their offices. We know they cannot. They have reported the reasons why they cannot. Then, while they are here, it seems to me that it is incorrect legislation to provide for the payment of their salaries. I regret as much as any Senator can, to take this position. I know well that those gentlemen while here hold themselves in readiness to perform the duties of the offices to which they have been appointed: It would seem to be but reasonable, hence, that they should have some compensation. But we are legislating not for them as individuals. If we legislate at all, we legislate in view of the interests of the country—in view of the subject-matter to which their offices relate. It seems to me that we cannot feel ourselves justified in providing for the payment of their salaries, while they are not discharging the duties of their offices.

Mr. BADGER. I was originally opposed to the adoption of the proviso to the appropriation bill, the repeal of which is now sought to be obtained by the bill under the consideration of the Senate. I thought then, and I think now, that it was an unjust, and a hazardous, and very impolitic system by which to enforce the discharge of the duties of public officers, and especially to enforce the discharge of the duties of judicial officers. If we had had a system upon this subject—a system of the Government of long and established continuance, and we were now called upon to make an exception out of that general system in favor of the particular class of officers to whom this bill refers—the remarks of the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat, would be entitled to great weight. But this is the case of a proviso added to an appropriation bill—a proviso sprung upon the country, in virtue of which, whether the absence be with or without fault; whether the officer be expelled from his post, or prevented, unless at the peril of his life, from returning to it; or whether he had absented himself voluntarily and negligently, because he was careless and indifferent in the discharge of his duty—without reference to any consideration of that kind, we visit his offense (treating it as a judicial ascertainment of judicial default) with the forfeiture of his salary. Now, such a system as that cannot be right.

Without going into the particular circumstance to which the Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] has referred; agreeing with him in the sentiments which he has expressed on the subject, I will merely remark, that, however these difficulties may have originated, these gentlemen, with great difficulty, and at great expense, and at no small hazard to themselves, went into that Territory. A state of things has occurred there in which they cannot remain, and on account of which they were compelled to leave the Territory. They are here. It belongs to Congress, as the Senator from California has said, to institute the measures necessary to make their return safe and practicable, in order to enable them to execute the duties which their officers require in that Territory. In the mean time, they cannot go there. And until that state of things which has compelled them to leave is done away with, can it be right; is it fair; is it just; is it reasonable, to visit a sentence of starvation upon them while we are engaged—or whether engaged or not, ought to be engaged—in establishing some law by which the violated authority of the Union may be restored, and the peaceable return to that country of these judicial officers be effected, so that they may exercise their proper functions as they are executed in every other State and Territory of the Union?

The proviso itself was originally wrong, in my judgment. Subsequent events have proved the injurious purposes to which it may be applied. It seems to me that the Senate owes it to itself, owes it to these officers, owes it to the system on which our public affairs have been hitherto conducted, to repeal it at once, and declare that no injury shall result to the parties from its having been adopted.

Now, whether these gentlemen have the animus revertendi to that Territory or not, I have no means personally of knowing. The understanding is, that they have been, in effect, expelled from the Territory; and I presume that if, when they can return there with safety, they do not return, the President of the United States will discharge his duty by informing them that they can no longer be allowed to hold offices when they cannot attend to the duties belonging to them.

Mr. CHASE. I regret very much to be compelled to differ from the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] on this question. But the Congress of the United States has thought proper to define, by law, the terms on which these judges take their office. They have taken upon them, under the appointment of the President, the discharge of their judicial duties upon these terms, clearly understood by them. There can be no doubt as to that fact. When they became judges of these Territories, they knew that they would not be permitted to absent themselves from the performance of their judicial duties for a longer period than sixty days without the forfeiture of their salaries; and that if they should so forfeit them, they must appeal to the liberality of Congress for the payment, notwithstanding the forfeiture. If such payment were now proposed as a distinct and independent proposition, I am not prepared to say how I should vote upon it. But we are now called upon to legislate for all cases—not merely the cases which have occurred, but cases which may hereafter occur. We are asked to repeal a proviso under which these Territories were organized. It seems to me that it is unwise. It seems to me that it is unnecessary.

Something has been said as to the urgency of the circumstances under which the judges for Utah left the performance of their duties. I have read their report; I have read the statements of other gentlemen who were cognizant of the state of affairs in that country; and I have yet to see anything which satisfies my mind at all that they might not have remained there with perfect safety, and freely administered justice in all cases which might have been brought before them. It is very possible that they might have had very few cases submitted to them. If they had been sent to a community of Friends, or Quakers, they might have had no cases at all brought before them. But I have no doubt that they were at perfect liberty to adjudicate all cases submitted—to remain in that Territory, exempt from all danger to life or person, as long as they chose to stay. Notwithstanding that, they left the Territory. They left it, notwithstanding their duties bound them to remain; notwithstanding the law bound them to remain; notwithstanding the law imposed upon them a forfeiture of their salaries if they did not remain.

Now, if we adopt this provision, the practical result will be, that we shall have judges for these Territories who are under no obligation whatever to remain in them, and discharge their duties. They will not be bound to go there; they will not be bound to remain there, if they do go; they may absent themselves whenever and as long as they choose, and still their salaries would be dependant wholly, not on the will of Congress, not on the will of the legislative power, but on the will of the Executive. This strikes me as all wrong. The salaries of the judicial officers of the Government should be dependant on the will of Congress, and on the will of Congress alone; and they should be confined, in the performance of their functions, to the line which the laws of Congress prescribe. I am, therefore, averse to this amendment; though, at the same time, as I said before, I am quite willing to enact into a law a portion of this bill: that is, so much as authorizes the judges to leave hereafter, having first obtained the sanction of the President. That, it seems to me, is quite as far as we can be asked to go. I would not legislate for past events, but merely for future contingencies.

Mr. GEYER. I rise for the purpose of offering some explanation of the bill to the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER] who appears to understand it different from its real import. It will be seen, by reference to the first section of the amendment of the committee, taken together with the amendment which I have had the honor to submit, that provision is made only for the payment of the salaries which have heretofore accrued. If these officers remain absent from their duties and from the Territory, then the first section of the act will apply to them, and they must have leave of the President of the United States, or they must show cause that is satisfactory for such absence. The design of the amendment is, without intending to pronounce any judgment upon the events which have occurred in Utah, to suspend the operation of the proviso in reference to those officers. That there is a necessity for the amendment, will appear from a single suggestion. Every officer who is appointed here, must be absent from the time of his appointment to the time when he arrives at the Territory of Utah—a period of more than sixty days. If, however, they should be appointed in a season (as I believe these officers were) when it is impracticable to pass the prairies, they will have to be from ninety to one hundred and twenty days absent from the Territory after the time of their appointment. The proviso, as it stands, operates as a forfeiture of their entire salary, because of this necessary absence from their duties and from the Territory. I supposed that the better way of adjusting this matter would be to restore the law, so far as the past is concerned, to what it was before the proviso was enacted. Then the first section of this act, if it should become a law, would operate hereafter to prevent any absence without leave of the President, or without good cause. An emergency may arise where leave of the President cannot be obtained. Then, when the good cause should be shown, the salary ought to be paid, especially if there should be anything like the emergency supposed in the report made by the officers from Utah.

The effect then, of this bill, if it shall be passed, will be this: the salaries, as far as they have accrued, will be paid. But, if any officer shall remain, after the passage of this act, sixty days absent from his duties, without leave of the President, or without showing good cause to the satisfaction of the President for such absence, he will forfeit his salary for the period of his absence. That is, I suppose, the extent to which the provision ought to go. For my own part, I happened to be in a minority in the Committee on the Judiciary. I favored a total repeal of that proviso, for the reason stated by the honorable Senator from North Carolina. But it was thought better to have a general provision upon the statute book, which should secure the presence of these officers hereafter; and under circumstances where judgment should not be taken upon them from the mere fact of absence, but that an opportunity should be given to present to some other tribunal, a sufficient excuse for that absence.

Mr. BROOKE. I would ask respectfully, why it is, that an exception is made against these particular judicial officers, which does not prevail against any other officer of the Government? The Judges of the Supreme Court and the District Judges are not liable to a forfeiture of their salary in the event that they fail to perform their duties, either in whole or in part. I know very well that the Circuit Judge of the United States, assigned to the circuit in which is included the district of Mississippi, has not been performing duty in that State for several years. And yet I never heard of any liability being imposed upon him of a forfeiture of a portion of his salary. Does not the Constitution extend to and protect these territorial officers as well as other officers of the United States? If so, then my inquiry is answered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHASE. I now move to strike out all after the word "absence," to the end of the first section of the amendment—being the words "unless good cause for such absence shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President." The effect of the amendment will be to allow an officer of any of the Territories to absent himself if he obtains leave from the President of the United States, and to be paid his salary if he has such leave. It will not at all affect the provision which has just been adopted by the Senate, but will make it necessary for an officer, in all cases, to obtain the previous assent of the President, before he can leave his post.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, were concurred in.

Mr. ATCHISON. I desire to inquire whether this bill is intended to cover all the officers within the limits of the Territories, or only those officers necessary to the territorial government.

Mr. GEYER. It includes all who were covered by the proviso to the appropriation act of last year.

Mr. ATCHISON. What officers in those Territories are covered by that proviso?

Mr. BADGER. The judges and the secretaries, I believe.

Mr. GEYER. The proviso is to the appropriation for the salaries of the governors, judges, and secretaries of the Territories.

Mr. ATCHISON. Then I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

NON-INTERVENTION.

The resolution some time since submitted by Mr. CLARKE, on the subject of non-intervention, came up as the special order.

Mr. BELL. Before the question is finally taken on these resolutions, I wish to say something in regard to them, as my feelings have been somewhat questioned. I am very indifferent as to the time when I shall be heard. The Senate may fix on any time they may think proper. Perhaps this day week will be acceptable to the Senate. I understand that there are two measures, the French spoliation bill and the bill for the establishment of a navy-yard in California, which the gentlemen most interested in them are desirous to have disposed of this week. I have, therefore, suggested this day week as proper for the consideration of these resolutions. If that is not acceptable to the Senate, I will name any other day.

Mr. CLARKE. Let it be the first Monday in April.

Mr. BELL. The Senator from Rhode Island suggests the first Monday in April, which will be next Monday week. If that day is agreeable to the Senate, I have no objection; and, therefore, I move the postponement of this subject until that day.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVY-YARD AND DRY-DOCK IN CALIFORNIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to establish a navy-yard and depôt on the bay of San Francisco, in California.

The Committee on Naval Affairs report the bill with an amendment, to authorize the President to provide for the construction of a basin and railway in connection with the sectional floating dry-dock now being constructed at San Francisco, in California; and also to authorize him to allow additional compensation (not exceeding double their present pay) to the officers he may appoint to select the site for the navy-yard in San Francisco bay.

Mr. BADGER, some time since, proposed an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which was to substitute "the Secretary of the Navy," for "the President of the United States," in making the contract for the construction of the basin and railway, and allowing extra compensation to the officers for performing this service; and also to appropriate $500,000 for carrying this act into effect.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the Committee on Naval Affairs did not report this bill without a full examination of the subject. At the last session of Congress, the necessity of establishing a navy-yard in California was, through a resolution offered by me, brought to the notice of the committee. The Secretary of the Navy was consulted, and recommended that an appropriation should be made to commence the work, and the committee, by a unanimous vote, instructed the chairman to propose an amendment for this object to the naval appropriation bill.

It is well known to the Senate that the appropriation bills were near being lost at the last session by a protracted discussion on the river and harbor bill. When the naval appropriation bill came up, and the chairman of the Naval Committee was on the floor proposing the amendments he had been instructed to offer, the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. HUNTER] announced to the Senate that if another amendment was permitted to be offered to the bill it would be lost; and thus the subject passed over. On the first day of this session I gave notice that I would offer a bill establishing a navy-yard in California, introduced a few days thereafter, and had it referred to the Naval Committee. It was amended so as to include the basin and railway for a dock, and brought before the Senate in its present shape.

When the bill was called up on a former occasion, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROD-

[READ] opposed its passage for reasons which I shall now proceed to examine. He said, "it is a very important bill." This is true. It is a bill of the greatest importance, as it lays the foundation for national defense on the Pacific coast of the United States. Upon its fate depends the question of defending that coast, or leaving it in its present unprotected position. But this is not the light in which the Senator looked upon it as important. He attached importance to it because it would cost money to establish these defenses. The Senator commenced his remarks upon the bill with the skill of an able tactician. He struck at its weakest point; for I have learned from painful experience in my short service here that the necessity which exists for enacting laws for the State of California never has as much weight with Congress as the amount of money it will take to carry these laws into execution. The Senator must be well aware of this fact, and he avails himself of it in the very opening of his speech. He says the bill is important—and why? Because "it will involve the necessity of an expenditure of from $3,000,000 to $7,000,000." Now, sir, this is a bold assertion, and if sustained by proofs will materially affect the action of the Senate upon the bill. I undertake to say that the Senator has no estimate from any department of the Government upon which he bases this assertion. It is evidently a random shot—a statement made without due consideration. If based upon any calculation approaching to accuracy, he certainly would not have left a margin of $4,000,000. He says "from $3,000,000 to $7,000,000." I should like to know whether he means it will be near seven, or nearer three millions?—whether it will be six millions or four millions? Or does he intend to split the difference, and say five millions is to be the cost of this work?

I hope the Senator [Mr. BRODHEAD] did not intend to take any unfair advantage of this measure, by exciting the alarm of the members of this body, who are the zealous guardians of the public Treasury—when he asserts that this bill will cause so enormous an expenditure. I undertake to say, that the lowest amount named by the Senator will never be required to be expended upon this work; and I hope that this round assertion will not deter any one from giving the bill a fair and impartial consideration. To show that the Senator's estimate cannot be relied on, I will refer to other portions of his speech. He says "a railway and basin will cost $1,500,000, and perhaps $2,000,000, and will require from five to ten years for its construction." (The contract heretofore made required the completion of the work in four years.) As he advances in his argument, he reduces his estimate to "$1,000,000 or 1,500,000;" and he repeats this assertion on two other occasions, in his speech. Now, we know exactly what this basin and railway will cost. It is just $840,000, and no more. The Secretary of the Navy proposed to give this sum for its construction, and the patentees accepted the proposition. The Senator could easily have ascertained this in the Navy Department, when he was getting the facts he brought to the notice of the Senate; and I regret that he did not do so, for, as I said before, nothing is so detrimental to the passage of bills for California as the enormous amount it is supposed works of this description will cost in that country. If the Senator had stated that his principal opposition to the bill, was because it cost $840,000 to build a basin and railway, then his argument would have had its fair and legitimate weight upon the Senate. But he does injustice to the measure when he swells this item of $840,000 to $2,000,000.

Again, the Senator says: "No Secretary of the Navy has ever recommended this basin and railway in connection with a dry dock." The Senator is not borne out in this assertion by the record, as I shall show. I read from a report from the Navy Department, dated February 12th, 1844, made by the Hon. David Henshaw, then Secretary of the Navy, and one of the ablest that has ever presided over that Department:

"An excavated stone dock can accommodate, ordinarily, but one vessel at a time, and, during war, would hardly afford the facilities that would be needed. The Navy commissioners, in a report dated February 17, 1836, state that it might require twelve thousand days' labor to repair the bottom of a seventy-four—working in the longest days of the summer. In such a case, many weeks, if not months, must elapse before such a vessel could be taken from the dock, owing to the comparatively small number of persons who could work upon her at once in so confined a place.

"The sectional floating-dock, with rail-tracks, could accommodate many vessels at once, where they would be placed with ample room, light, and air around them, and giving every facility for working with dispatch.

"The object so strongly desired in Mr. Jefferson's message, before quoted—that our vessels may be laid up dry, and under cover from the sun, and which he hoped to obtain by the means of lock-docks—it is believed may be much better, and much more cheaply obtained, by the sectional dock and railway.

"All experience verifies the remark of Mr. Jefferson, that 'no cares, no attentions can preserve vessels from rapid decay, which lie in water, exposed to the sun;' and that works of wood, laid up dry, will remain scarcely affected by time.

"Some of the most costly ships of our Navy have rotted, and been broken up, seeing little more service than lying at the wharves; while others, built about the same periods, remain comparatively uninjured, in the houses in which they were built.

"It is believed that the sectional dock and railways will not only answer for the repairs of ships, better than any other plan yet devised, but that they will become the only building-ways; and that, instead of letting our ships, when not in use, lie and decay at the navy-yards, in ordinary, they will be raised from the water, and placed under cover, protected from the weather, upon the rail-tracks.

"The plan of the sectional dock and railway commends itself to favor by its cheapness and simplicity; and if, on trial, it realizes what has been promised from its use, it will enable the Government to construct at a moderate cost, a dock at each of the navy-yards, capable of accommodating a number of ships at once.

"After carefully considering the facts, statements, and opinions which have been presented to the Department, at different periods, by the officers and others who have had the subject of a dry-dock at the Brooklyn yard under investigation, the undersigned is fully persuaded that the plan of dock of Mr. Dakin, here spoken of, is worthy of trial on a scale sufficiently large for raising the largest ships."

Thus it will be seen, sir, that a Secretary of the Navy has recommended, and strongly recommended, the mode of docking vessels proposed by this bill. Nor is the Senator borne out in his assertion, by the reports of the present Secretary, who has evidently changed his opinion on the subject. In his report at the last session, he said, "that a sectional dock alone, with a pier to secure it, would answer every demand of the Navy on the coast of California, for many years to come." In his last report, he says, "It will be necessary to provide a pier or basin, to render this dock capable of use;" and he postpones an opinion between the basin and railway, and a pier, until a further examination is made of the waters of the bay at San Francisco, by a board of officers appointed for the purpose. It is here evident that the Secretary himself doubts the propriety of his former opinion, which, upon full examination, I have no doubt he will find to have been incorrect.

The Senator availed himself of a statement of the Secretary of the Navy, in his first report on this subject, that is calculated to mislead the Senate. It is that a pier, which will cost only $50,000 is all that will be necessary for the floating dock now building for California. He assumes this as a fixed fact, and proceeds to argue, that "a pier is all that is necessary," and that "merchants never think of making use of the basin and railway—they use a pier which costs $50,000, instead of a basin and railway which will cost $1,000,000 or $1,500,000." I shall now, sir, proceed to show, that a pier cannot be built in California for $50,000. It must be built of stone; for it is a well-known fact, that piers made of timber, in the Bay of San Francisco, are soon destroyed by worms. Such a work would soon become useless, and constantly liable to casualties. On examination it will be found that no officer of the Government who has any respect for his reputation, will recommend the building of a pier, in these waters, of any other material than stone.

Well, sir, what will a stone pier cost? I find that the permanent wharf now being constructed at Pensacola, has already cost $414,593 33, and it is but little more than half completed. I may safely assume that it will not cost less than $600,000 when completed. This is the kind of a pier or wharf that will have to be built in California, if we do not construct a basin and railway. Assuming that the cost of materials, and labor, in California will be double what it is in Pensacola, (and this is a low estimate) a pier alone will cost the Government $1,200,000, nearly one third more than the patentees of the basin and railway have agreed to complete them for in California. This floating dock is useless, without a pier, or basin; and if you build a pier, such as the Government should construct on that coast, it involves a much larger expenditure than is proposed in this bill. It should be borne in mind that the basin can be also used as a pier. It is to be built of stone, and will be five hundred feet in length, and answer all the purposes of a pier as well as a basin.

The Senator says, that "this basin and railway is wholly unnecessary and useless." I have just shown that the basin will answer all the purposes of a pier, and, therefore, the Senator's argument falls to the ground, for it will be useful. But suppose, for argument's sake, that he is correct; then this bill accomplishes the very object that he is aiming at; for, in that event, it entirely dispenses with the basin and railway. The bill provides "that when the site shall have been secured, and so soon thereafter as it shall have been ascertained to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, that the basin and railway at Philadelphia or Kittery, are in full and successful operation," then he is authorized to contract for the construction of a basin and railway. Now, sir, there is to be no experiment about this matter. This law requires a certainty that the basin and railway at Philadelphia or Kittery are in full and successful operation before a dollar of the public money can be expended on a similar work in California; and, sir, what is meant by "full and successful operation?" It is, that this basin and railway, in connection with a floating dock, can take up a ship of the line, with a full armament, place it securely upon the railway, and as securely return it through the dock to the water. When this is done, the President can act under this bill, and not before. Suppose that the experiment is successful, it is one of the greatest improvements of the age, and the very thing we want in California. It will give us, for $1,450,000, the use of a dozen docks, equal in capacity to the stone-dock in New York, which cost $2,146,730 10. The Emperor of Russia has recently paid nearly $13,000,000 for the building of seven stone docks; and here we have, for an expenditure of less than $1,500,000, docks of nearly double their capacity. Need I add another word to show the immense importance of adopting this improvement in California, if it should prove successful, where the price of labor and materials is so great. I wish it to be borne in mind, that the basin and railway must be proved to be entirely successful, or this law, so far as that matter is concerned, is a dead letter on the statute book.

The Senator says, "We have now more docks than there is any necessity for." But, where are they? From Pensacola, round Cape Horn, and up the Pacific to Bhering's Straits, there is no dock; and because there are more on the Atlantic coast than are useful, shall we, for this reason, have none on the Pacific? Are we to be told that, because money has been wastefully expended here upon useless works, none shall be expended upon useful works in California? I hope such will not be the policy adopted toward us by this Government. I do not agree with the Senator. I think these docks, navy-yards and coast defenses, on the Atlantic coast, are necessary and useful; and, although not on so extensive a scale, we need the same on the Pacific. In order to show that we are not extravagant in the demands we make on the Government for the defense of the Pacific, as compared with the past policy of this Government in defending the Atlantic coast, and giving to its commerce the advantages of light-houses, I have prepared a statement of the amount of money thus expended and estimated for.

The Atlantic coast of the United States, from the northeastern boundary on the ocean to the mouth of the St. Marys, is 1,450 miles. This is the whole of the Atlantic coast of the old thirteen States, and is less than our present possessions on the Pacific. From the mouth of the St. Marys to the south cape of the peninsula of Florida is 450 miles, making a total of the Atlantic coast of 1,900 miles. I will now show to the Senate what has been paid from the national Treasury to fortify and protect this coast.

I take from the report of General Totten, Chief Engineer, on the subject of the national defenses, and will also add the estimate for new works and fortifications:

I will go now to the light-houses, and quote from "the list of light-houses, beacons, and floating-lights of the United States, prepared by Stephen Pleasonton, Fifth Auditor and General Superintendent of Lights." Oregon.....	500 "

Making a total for the Pacific coast of 1620 "

Nearly equal to the whole Atlantic coast, including the peninsula of Florida. And what have you expended on that extensive coast for fortifications, light-houses, navy-yards, and docks? Not one dollar! What have you appropriated? About $150,000 for light-houses not yet commenced, $250,000 for a dock, to cost, when completed, $610,000, and nothing for fortifications or a navy-yard. Even the estimate for surveys for fortifications, of $50,000, made by the War Department, has been left out of the army appropriation bill by the Committee of Ways and Means, which is an indication that we are to have no fortifications there.

Here is my own State, of California, which paid $3,212,127 79 into the Treasury from customs the last fiscal year, with a sea-coast of 970 miles, containing within her limits 188,981 square miles, more than four times the size of the State of New York, utterly destitute of light-house establishments, necessary and indispensable to our commercial marine in approaching her coasts. Here is the Pacific Empire State destined to command the commerce of the Pacific and Asiatic seas, left wholly unprotected for, in regard to works of protection and defense. In the agitations and political commotions of European nations, we know not at what hour we may find it necessary to place this nation in an attitude of defence, even if only to defend our neutral rights as a great maritime power, to say nothing of the importance of conforming to the policy of Washington and his successors, in time of peace to make proper preparation for war.

The honorable Senator has alluded to the war of 1812 to show that we need no national defense. I wish to call his attention to the historical fact that the British sloop of war Raccoon entered the port of Astoria, in Oregon, and in the defenseless condition of our rights there, formally took possession of the country in behalf of his Britannic Majesty, and changed the name of "Astoria" to "Fort George." Thanks to the valiant spirits that now occupy California and Oregon, no hostile foot can ever tread that soil with impunity; yet who can estimate the extent of the mischief and ruin that would be there inflicted by the presence of a powerful hostile fleet, left at the country now is by the Government of the United States wholly unprotected.

The Senator makes a comparison between our country, during the war of 1812, and the present time, and draws the inference that, as we needed no defenses to protect our coast and commerce then, they are useless now. The Senator has certainly not looked at the commercial progress of this country since the close of the war of 1812, or he would have drawn no such inference. I have examined the statistics of our commercial marine, and find that since 1815, (when the war with Great Britain closed) to 1850, we have built 34,792 vessels, with a tonnage of 447,591,045 tons. The registered whale fishery for the last twelve years, to wit: from 1840 to 1851, had a tonnage of 2,038,177. The registered whale fishery for 1851, had a tonnage of 181,645.

It is known that, perhaps with the exception of a single ship that visits the Greenland seas, the whale fishery is confined to the Pacific and South seas. The proceeds of the sea for the year ending June 13, 1850, from the whale fishery alone, amounted to $2,318,024. Are no means to be provided for the protection and encouragement of this valuable traffic? And are our possessions on the Pacific coast to be deprived of all those facilities, which aid in the exaltation of a State or nation, through a miserable, parsimonious policy, on the part of the General Government, which refuses to extend to us proper aid, when we are advancing, with giant strides, in all that constitutes real worth and greatness? So much for what the Government has failed to do, to build up the commercial greatness of her Pacific possessions. And when we look into the interior of the country, we have but little hope that a more liberal policy will be pursued toward that section of the Union. We have no reliable evidence that we are to receive a grant of land to encourage the great railway system that will yet begirt this ocean-bound Empire, in order that we may do our part in improving our State, developing its boundless resources, and connect us with the Atlantic, by communications, as we are in principle, in all that concerns the glory of this Union.

Only twenty-five years have elapsed since the railway system began in the United States. At the end of the year 1850, we had 8,797 miles of railway, which cost $286,455,078. There were, up to the close of 1851, by estimate, 10,618 miles, and to the end of 1852, we have its extent estimated at 12,600—more than half the circumference of the globe! Does any one suppose that this great system of land communication will stop until it reaches the Pacific ocean? Then, with a proper system of defense upon that coast, which will give us a permanent commercial ascendancy on the Pacific and Asiatic seas, the carrying trade between Asia and Europe will be within our territory, and enable us to control the commerce and exchanges of the world. Congress has dealt liberally and justly with the East, in land, money, and improvements. Let them deal in the same spirit with the West. We ask nothing more.

The Senator says, that the commercial marine does not use the basin and railway. Preparations are now making in New York to build one, to avoid the expense of accumulating docks; to meet the wants of our commercial marine. The Senator also objects to the mode of completing the title for the site of the navy-yard; and supposes that a California jury will not do justice to the United States. He need be under no apprehensions on this subject, for the location of the navy-yard will greatly enhance the value of the property surrounding it, and the owners of property near eligible sites for its location will be most willing to give a quit claim to the United States for any amount of land needed for this purpose. I doubt very much whether there is a man in California who would risk his title in a contest with the United States. Land titles in that country are not so perfect as to court an issue of title with the United States, for lands selected for public purposes.

This part of the bill was intended to do away with the necessity of further legislation as to the selection of a site. The Senator says this country has no necessity for national defense, because no nation wants to go to war with us. This may be true now, but will it always remain so? If the Senator was the emperor of the world, and should issue his edict that there should be no more wars, then there would be no necessity for national defenses, here or elsewhere. Unfortunately for mankind, he has not this power; and I prefer adhering to the time-honored policy of this Government, "to prepare for war in time of peace." The question now is, shall we make this preparation on the Pacific coast of the United States. Arguments in favor of the expenditure of public money in any State of the Confederacy have less weight, when they come from a representative of such State, than when they emanate from an entirely disinterested source.

It is fortunate for me that I can bring high authority to my aid in favor of this bill, by reading from an able report, made by the Naval Committee of the House at the last session:

"The next object which has engaged the attention of the committee is that which relates to the naval defense of our western coast.

"The acquisition of California, and the occupation of Oregon, have extended our sea front from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. The national defenses to be provided for those distant shores must, of necessity, be almost entirely naval. The approaches from every other direction except from the sea are difficult and doubtful, and may easily be well secured. But so weak and helpless against hostile approaches on the sea front are our fellow-citizens on the Pacific, that it is within the reach of any third or fourth-rate naval power with whom the United States may be at war greatly to harass and annoy them. So dependent are they upon ships for supplies of all kinds, that a blockade of their principal ports for a few months would reduce the State of California to a starving condition.

"The average population of California, for the last year, may be estimated at 200,000; and it may be assumed, that during the year there were about 2,000 vessels of all descriptions which entered her ports. This estimate is sufficiently accurate to show how entirely dependent that country is upon the sea, and how vulnerable from that quarter; for it proves that, in the average, one ship is required to supply the wants and necessities of about one hundred Californians—so little do they produce except gold, and so dependent are they upon foreign markets. The world would not afford sea-going vessels enough at this rate to fetch and carry for the people on this side of the Rocky mountains; nor does the world afford another instance of a people so dependent for supplies upon the sea, or so exposed and so utterly helpless in case of attack by sea, as are the people of California in their present condition.

"A blockade of our Atlantic ports might interfere with our intercourse abroad, but it could not bring the people here to such a degree of suffering, distress, and misery as would be inflicted on the people of California by a blockade of their coast. The voyage by sea hence to California and Oregon is the longest voyage known to navigation; and as far as the naval defenses of that State and Territory are concerned, they are as a colony in the most distant part of the world, which in war the navy has to protect, and the route to which would be thronged with the enemy and beset with dangers.

"In providing the means of naval defense, or planning a course of naval policy, regard must be had to the situation and condition of other nations.

"Seeing, then, the means of attack, and knowing the extent of their resources at sea, and our own, we can the better judge as to the degree and kind of preparation which it behoves us to make.

"Owing to the great naval resources of the States upon the waters of the Atlantic, it never has been and never will be consistent with the true policy of the country to keep up in peace a standing navy in proportion to the standing navies of other countries. Hence, though we find the United States the first commercial nation for tonnage, she is only the fifth in actual naval force. The navies of Great Britain, France, Russia, and Turkey, all carry more guns than the American navy, and the Egyptian navy has only seven guns less.

"In proportion to commercial marine, the navy of the United States is the smallest navy in the world. The nations of Europe support navies that mount some twenty, some ten, but all more than two guns for every 1,000 tons of commercial shipping; whereas we mount, on the average, rather less than one gun. Great Britain has six, France ten, Russia twenty-four guns for every 1,000 tons of shipping owned by their merchants. The naval force to be kept ordinarily in commission should not, in the judgment of your committee, ever reach such a figure as these navies present, nor do the public interests require that in times of profound peace it should exceed one third or one fourth of the lowest of these rates.

"As commerce expands and increases, the demands upon the navy for service also increase; therefore, there seems to exist somewhere a ratio between the tonnage of commerce and the guns of armed ships, which, if it could be discovered, an eye being turned to the degree of preparation of other navies and our own resources, would determine the proper size and the most judicious rate of growth for the American navy. That navy is no larger now for the protection of both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts than it was for the protection of the Atlantic coast alone; for the present size was determined before Texas was annexed, California acquired, or Oregon occupied. This increase of sea front, therefore, would seem to call for an expansion of the navy. But the committee do not propose any enlargement; they believe that the fundamental changes already suggested in the models and armaments of our ships, together with other arrangements which may be easily adopted by executive authority for increased activity and efficiency, will render the present force amply sufficient for a peace establishment.

"In the opinion of the committee the naval resources of the Atlantic States, in contradistinction of the Pacific States, are unrivaled. The railroads, canals, and other great works and thoroughfares which penetrate into the interior and intersect among the mountains, have converted almost every forest into a timber-shed for the navy. The tonnage of the United States is the greatest in the world. Our merchant ships are unmatched for speed and unequalled in size. We build more ships than any other people, and we may almost be regarded as a nation of ship-builders. With sailors enough in peace to man the largest commercial marine that ever spread its sails to the breeze, we should have from that service gallant tars enough in war to man the largest fleet the world ever saw.

"With such means, resources, and facilities at command for stretching out the naval arm upon the Atlantic in war, it would be neither wise nor desirable in peace to provide either ships or guns according to the numbers which Great Britain or any other nation may choose to build. All things considered, the Pacific coasts require the protection of a much larger navy in proportion than the Atlantic; for the case is different there. We have no private ship-yards; no ship-builders; no timber-sheds; no railroads running from the sea-board up into forests of ship-timber; nor any other of the facilities for building up a navy. All the materials for creating a navy there must be sent hence over that long, tedious, and dangerous route, which in war would be controlled and commanded by Great Britain.

"First standing in the middle of the great highway to California is the island of Bermuda. Ships from the southern ports bound to the other hemisphere pass on one side of this island, while those from the Northern States pass on the other side of it. It is a powerful position, amply provided with coals, munitions of war, and military stores of all sorts. A few steamers stationed as lookouts off that island would give intelligence of the approach, in war, of any fleet bound to California. Escaping here, in war, the rock-bound island of St. Helena, another centre of naval operations in the South Atlantic, stands on the way-side of our road to California. But getting safely by this, we next come to the Falkland Islands, another station upon which the British navy is perched right in the middle of our road. Escape here would be a miracle; for at this point the tracks of all vessels come together preparatory to doubling the cape. But if the fleet for the succor of California should pass by this port without molestation, it would be only to encounter the storms and tempests of the cape, and there, in that inhospitable region, to buffet with the ancient and unsubsidized allies of that proud realm, as the winds of heaven were once styled by a British statesman; and, after all these dangers are passed, the haven we seek would still be three months off.

"The idea, therefore, of sending to our Pacific coasts any succor in time of war around Cape Horn, or of furnishing any navy supplies by such a route, is a mere chimera—wholly and utterly impracticable.

"Taking this view of the subject, the committee propose to consider the means of naval defence which economy, true policy, and a sound forecast require should be provided for California and Oregon. Having determined that, they propose to recommend a plan for accomplishing it.

"As to the extent of the naval preparations which ought to be made in peace for the defense in war of any coast line, there is room for wide and honest differences of opinion, more especially as neither the time nor the motive of that war can be foreseen, nor can it be known who the other belligerent may be. But in this case and on this occasion, though some degree of preparation is necessary, that preparation involves no tedious undertaking nor extravagant appropriations.

"No respectable naval power is to be found on the shores or among the islands of the Pacific. There is not so much even as a dock-yard to be found, from one extent to the other of that vast ocean. The committee cannot learn, though inquiry has been made, that there is a single port in the Pacific ocean, or along its shores, that is at this time capable, with its own resources, of building or equipping so much even as a second class frigate. Maritime nations, as England, France, and Russia, have colonies there, but no naval stations of any consequence whatever.

"Hence it appears that the naval supremacy on the sea is easily acquired, and when once acquired and placed in hands as strong as those of the United States, it will not be likely soon to be wrested from them, or even to be disputed. In the event of war, Great Britain finding us unprepared or without naval resources in California, would, by means of her stations and other facilities, send a force there superior to the small one now kept in commission, and so overpower us; at least, seeing that we were unprepared, she would be induced to make the attempt.

"But if at the breaking out of war she should see ships already built and lying in ordinary in our Pacific ports; if she should see there the means and facilities of equipment and repair—none of which she has; if she should also see, in connexion with this state of preparation, the Marblehead and other fishermen whom the war would throw out of employment, and of whom 12,000 are engaged in their hardy occupations, on the waters of the Pacific; if she should see there these very men, standing as a corps of reserve and ready to act, who, in Old Ironsides and other ships, gave her in the last war such cause of remembrance, she would no doubt be disposed to leave us alone in that quarter.

"As long as ships can be built on the Atlantic and delivered on the Pacific coast cheaper than they could be built there, true policy and economy require that they should be built here and sent there."

I will detain the Senate but a few minutes longer while I express my regret that the prevailing spirit of the present Congress seems to be adverse to the extension of the system of mail-steam-ship lines. There are great defects in the system; but these defects should not be used to destroy it. Let us avoid the errors of former laws, but never abandon a system which is intimately connected with our commercial prosperity. I shall, on a future occasion, go more fully into this subject, and content myself, for the present, with showing what a great advantage Great Britain would have in a war between the two countries, by using for war purposes the steam-ships now employed by that Government in carrying the mails all over the world.

In the event of such a war, Great Britain would arm her mail steamers and fill them with seamen to man the prize vessels they may capture. She has these steamers in all quarters of the globe. One large gun upon each would answer her purposes.

Her Mediterranean mail steamers would be ordered to the Straits of Gibraltar. Here they would capture every American vessel in the Mediterranean sea, and all vessels bound thither, and send them into Gibraltar for confiscation and safety.

Her Oriental steamers would be ordered to cruise off the Straits of Sunda, Gaspar, Macassar, and the Cape of Good Hope. This would enable them to capture nearly every American vessel in the East Indies. Their prizes would be sent to Singapore and Cape Town, or the Cape of Good Hope, for safety and confiscation.

Her Rio and Rio de la Plate steamers would be ordered to cruise on the Equator, and they would capture all the vessels that escaped round the Cape of Good Hope and Cape Horn, as well as all vessels going to and from Rio de la Plate and the Brazils. Their prizes would be sent to the Falkland Islands, St. Helena, Jamaica, and other islands in the West Indies for safety and confiscation.

Her West India, Boston, and New York steamers would be ordered to cruise off the harbors of the United States, and their prizes would be sent to Bermuda and Halifax for safety and confiscation.

Her Havre steamers would capture all vessels sailing to or from Europe.

I now come to the North Pacific ocean. Here alone Great Britain has no fortified point where her prizes could be deposited for safety and confiscation. But she could soon remedy this defect. The Sandwich Islands are powerless, and contain some good harbors, and the past history of Great Britain shows that she would not hesitate to seize these islands, and make their harbors the asylum for her prizes. Thus her Pacific steamers would capture our whalers and merchant vessels in that ocean and send them to Biron's Bay, or some other harbor in the Sandwich Islands for safety and confiscation.

That this is no exaggerated statement of the power of the British Government in the event of a war with this country, is easy of demonstration had I the time to enlarge upon the subject. It should be borne in mind that her mail steamers are built with express reference to their use as war steamers. I am informed that simultaneously with their building armaments, are prepared and deposited at ports where they can, at short notice, be fitted to the vessels, and have them ready for war service.

The only point on the ocean, where we have any advantage over Great Britain, is in the North Pacific. As shown in the report I have just read, there she has no fortified harbors, naval depôts, or docks for the repair of vessels. Her steam marine is weaker there, than in any other part of the world. We have already more than a dozen steamers engaged in carrying the mails from Panama to California and Oregon. With a fully equipped navy-yard, and such a dock as this bill proposes to build, we could, in an incredibly short space of time, turn these steamers into vessels of war, and sweep the Pacific ocean, sending our prizes into San Francisco for safety and confiscation. With a knowledge of the fact that her whole Pacific commerce would be destroyed, and her East India possessions endangered, Great Britain would not engage in a war with this country, unless forced to do so by us. Although she could, as stated, cut up and destroy our commerce with other parts of the world, yet with ocean supremacy on the Pacific in our hands, it would be a question of the dismemberment of her empire. In the North, we would seize her North American possessions, and in the East we would destroy her dominion in Asia.

I have spoken of the dozen mail steamers running between Panama, California, and Oregon, which we could equip as war vessels in an emergency, if we had the necessary means of docking and fitting them up. But give us the important works asked for in this bill, and we will soon have five times as many steamers, and a vast naval fleet in ordinary in the bay of San Francisco; that could be speedily put in commission, and thus secure to us the undoubted naval supremacy of that ocean.

But what is our present condition? Why, we have no means of repairing the smallest injury to a vessel of any size on our Pacific coast. If such a steam or sail-vessel is injured in the North Pacific it must be abandoned, if it is not capable of running down the coast, thousands of miles, to Panama to be beached and repaired. The tide at Panama rises upwards of twenty feet, and the largest vessel can thus be beached and repaired. We have no such natural advantages in the North Pacific. The steamer Republic struck on a rock in a fog, just before entering the harbor of San Francisco. She got off, went into port, was repaired as well as it is possible to repair a vessel on that part of the coast, was dispatched thence for Panama with four hundred passengers, sprung a leak, and with the greatest difficulty got into Acapulco, and sunk in an hour after she cast anchor. She was again repaired so as to get to Panama with great difficulty, endangering the lives of the four hundred passengers and crew. On my way to take my seat at this session of Congress, the steamer Carolina put into Acapulco in distress, with three hundred and fifty passengers on board, having sprung a leak north of that port in a severe gale, and thus put in jeopardy the lives of every one on board. With a dock, basin, and railway at San Francisco, every steamer that leaves with such an immense number of passengers, would be examined before she left port.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have a double purpose in taking the floor at this time for a short time. In the first place, I wish to make some observations by way of a reply to the remarks made by the Senator from California on a former occasion, as well as those which he has made to-day. And in the second place, I wish to reinforce and sustain, with additional facts and arguments, the position which I assumed the other day, that this basin and railway was not only without the recommendation of the Navy Department, but was in opposition to it, and was useless and unnecessary.

Mr. President, the question now to be decided is not whether we shall fortify the coast of California—the question now before the Senate is not whether we shall have steamers all over the world. The question, and the only question, and the only point of any importance, to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate, is the propriety of erecting a basin and railway in connection with a dry-dock in California, which would cost, as I have said, from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. And I repeat, that it will cost that sum, notwithstanding what the honorable Senator from California has said, and I will follow my assertion with the proof presently. He admits that it will cost something more than $800,000. We all know the difference between the actual cost of such improvements and the original estimates, and that they frequently cost twice as much as the original estimates. These gentlemen originally offered to build the railways for a little more than $40,000, and they have received over $400,000 for them.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator says that he is anxious to have the western coast fortified. I am also anxious to have it fortified, and hence I object to this projected basin and railway, the construction of which would occupy five or six years. I will follow up that assertion with the proof; and if the honorable Senator is very anxious to have the western coast fortified, and our commerce sustained in the Pacific, he will go with me and adopt the bill which I have prepared as a substitute for the one now under consideration. I have modified this bill, and prepared one in compliance with the recommendation of the Navy Department, in favor of a pier, which will cost only $50,000, notwithstanding what the Senator has said, in place of the basin and railway, which will cost at least $1,000,000. It could, also, be constructed in a year or sixteen months, and our commerce will be aided in that time; whereas, the project of the Senator from California would render five or six years necessary. At the last session, a call was made on the Navy Department to say which was preferable, a basin and railway, or a pier, such as was in use on the Atlantic coast for the commercial marine. The Secretary of the Navy responded thus:

"In reply to so much of the resolution as inquires 'whether, in the judgment of the head of the Department, a dock could not be constructed sufficient for all the purposes of the navy, at much less expense to the Government than the one contemplated by the act aforesaid,' I have to state that, in my opinion, a sectional dock alone, without the addition of a basin and railway, but with a pier to secure it, would answer every demand of the navy, on the coast of California, for many years to come. Such a dock has recently raised the steam-ship Ohio, belonging to Messrs. Law & Co., in the harbor of New York, which ship is over three hundred feet in length.

"The cost of the dock alone would certainly be much less than one half, and possibly not more than one third, of the amount proposed to be paid for the whole work as herein stated. The addition of the pier to secure it, and render it capable of use, would probably not exceed $50,000. These can be completed and ready for use in two years at most, and may be in fifteen or twenty months; while the addition of the basin and railway will require from four to five years to complete them."

So that I propose that within a few months a pier, in connection with the floating dry dock, ordered at the last session, shall be erected, instead of the project of the Senator from California, which will require six years to complete. I propose to give the proper protection to our commerce on that coast within a year; he proposes to give it in six years. That is just the difference between us, sir.

The Senator says that this basin and railway has been recommended. Well, sir, although it may have been recommended by Mr. Henshaw—who, by the way, never was confirmed by the Senate, and never occupied a place there but a little while—the weight of authority is against it. I did not look at his report. I examined those of Secretary Mason, the late Secretary of the Navy, and I can find no Secretary of the Navy who has recommended this project. All have been heretofore opposed to it. And not only were they opposed to it, but, sir, so well satisfied was Congress at the last session, with regard to this question, that they abrogated an alleged contract for this basin and railway—as can be seen by a reference to the Navy appropriation bill. But yet the Senator, notwithstanding this solemn decision of the Congress, at the last session; notwithstanding the decision of the Navy Department, comes here again with this project, and at the same time complains of the delay in the erection of a naval establishment on the coast of California. Whose fault is it that there is delay? I put that question to the Senate. I did not propose the bill now before the Senate; I only proposed this particular item in this bill, and yet the Senator from California directs his argument against me, as if I had opposed fortifications and a navy-yard and dépôt on the coast of California. I made my argument, and based it upon facts and figures, to show that a basin and railway would not only be useless, but unnecessary.

The Senator says that a pier will be eaten by worms. I would like to know if this floating dry dock will not also be eaten up with worms.

Mr. GWIN. That will be coppered.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Very well, sir; cannot you copper a pier?

Mr. GWIN. No, sir.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not understand why you cannot; you can drive in copper nails all over it, if you please. If a floating dry-dock can be preserved from being eaten by worms, the pier can also be preserved; so that there is a perfect answer to the argument of the Senator.

But the Senator says the dock is not to be erected until the test is made at Philadelphia. That is just the way these docks have been going on on the Atlantic side. The gentleman says we have a great many. At whose instance have we a great many? At the instance of the gentlemen who have a patent for them, and who have obtained Congressional docks in opposition to the recommendation of the Navy Department. That is the way they are managed. We have a little of the responsibility in Congress, and a little at the Navy Department. We order a dock without any adequate knowledge of the necessity for it; and if we were upon the ground to examine the site, are we able to judge? Is this the proper tribunal to judge of such matters, and to make contracts? If contracts are to be made, they should be made by the Executive departments of the Government. We order the contract to be made, and to be made with particular persons, thus excluding competition; because competition is excluded when you order a contract to be made with certain individuals, who have a patent for a particular thing.

He says it is not to be erected till it is tested in Philadelphia or Kittery. Well, sir, how long is this trial to be delayed? This basin and railway were to be erected, according to the returns given in answer to my call for information on that subject, and were to be completed, tested, and taken off the hands of the contractors last June. Sir, although they may have been taken off the contractors' hands, and although they may have got their money, no test has ever yet been made; and I find in the deficiency bill, reported in the other House, an item on this subject which is worth mentioning, to show how these things are managed. It is a little curious:

To pay reserved per centage, under contract, for building a dry dock at Philadelphia.....$5,933 68
To pay for dredging the river in front of the dock at Philadelphia.....12,000 00

This basin and railway were to be taken off their hands last June, according to the contract. A vessel was taken there, but, of course, she could not be taken in. Nevertheless, the money was paid. The expenses go on for dredging, and we must pay them, sir. We have now expended $3,078,000 for these docks; and that, too, within the last five years; and no Government vessel or ship of the line has ever yet been placed upon one of them, to my knowledge. The Senator from California can correct me if I am in error.

Now, sir, if we are going to build docks, let us test them, and not have a little responsibility on Congress, and a little on the Navy Department.

I will go a little, sir, into the history of these docks, and how the business has been managed, and how the money has gone from the Treasury. We have had this dock business before Congress about eight years. That is long enough. I am opposed to monopolies. These gentlemen have obtained upwards of $3,000,000 for building docks—that is quite enough, in my opinion, to one set of men; they had a patent, and consequently had little or no competition to encounter.

I will read the amounts which they have obtained, and then will show, by their memorials, how much they proposed to build them for, and then the Senator from California can see whether this proposed structure in California will not amount to a million and a half of dollars, when I show their propositions made some years ago, and how much these works did actually cost.

Up to the year 1842, or 1843, this Government had expended $1,650,446 upon docks. We had passed through the war of the Revolution, and the war of 1812, having expended only that amount of money for docks.

Mr. DAWSON. Up to what time?

Mr. BRODHEAD. Up to the time of the commencement of the stone dock at New York, which was about the year 1842, I believe.

Mr. BADGER. It was 1841.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Then we paid for the stone dock $2,146,255 36. Then these gentlemen came on with their propositions, the one set claiming a patent for a particular kind of balance dock, and another for a sectional dock. The matter was contested for some time before Congress, as I learn from the memorial, and finally they united together, as I learn from the reports of the Departments. After seeing their names separate, and quarreling before Congress for two or three years, I find their names all together in the last contract.

They have received for a balance and floating dock at Kittery, and for a basin and railway, $732,905. They have received for the sectional floating dock at Philadelphia, $402,683; for a basin and two railways at the same place, $411,059; making in all $213,742 for a dock at Philadelphia. Then comes an additional estimate for dredging out, of $12,000, according to the bill reported in the House of Representatives. It has never been tested, although it was taken off the hands of the contractors last June; and no prudent Secretary of the Navy would put a vessel of the line on one of these basins and railways. They received for a balance and floating dock at Pensacola, $555,712, and for a basin and railway $353,225; and for a gate to the entrance of the basin $13,000; making $921,937 expended at Pensacola. They received
